

Welcome to the Digital DIGBY COURIER

1877-1978

100th Birthday

The hundredth anniversary of the Digby Weekly Courier has brought to mind some fond memories as contained in the following historical chapter of the writer. But first, I wish to congratulate the current editor of the Courier, Mrs. J.M. (Edith) Wallis, for a job well done over the years and still being well done, good service rendered with great fortitude.

According to any record, I have at hand, the Digby Courier, in one hundred years of publication, was controlled under the same family management for 42 years, 1931 to 1973, under the control of Wallis Print Limited. The late J.J. Wallis became editor of The Courier the second time, in 1929, and at the same time of the business, which he had been running for some time previously and which became Wallis Print Limited sometime between 1929 and 1931.

I well remember the last year of the twenties when I worked in the office of the son with the husband and father of the late J.J. Wallis, the Courier. Sometime in 1928 or early 1929, the late J.M. Wallis (Mac), son of "J.J." engaged me to work every day after school hours, Saturdays, and for some months after finishing school. The place of work was in the building of the present Digby town hall on First Avenue. J.J. Wallis then worked occasionally at the print shop but mostly across the street at the Courier office which was then located on land in the general area where The Royal Bank of Canada is now.

Wallis Job Print operated in 1929 with a staff of four consisting of J.J. Wallis, J.M. Wallis, Miss Eva Haynes, who later became Mrs. George Kicup, and myself. I was engaged as a printer in the left up-stairs. "J.J." occasionally worked at the printing plant but mostly at the Courier office. "Mac" worked nearly full time at all the different jobs at the Job Print, and I worked at various duties, most of the time being spent at operating printing presses.

We worked ten-hour days, six days a week. "J.J." and "Mac" sometimes worked overtime. I worked only the regular hours being paid a weekly wage which was comparatively good for those times and my lack of experience. I received four or five dollars a week for working after school hours to six o'clock and on Saturday all day, and nine dollars a week for full weeks after finishing school. A two or three dollar a week raise was offered to me in the fall of 1929 for me to stay on at printing, but I had made up my mind to enter a branch of the Royal Bank of Canada, starting salary of $300. The bank salary figured out about the same per hour as for the printing job. Nevertheless, the congenial atmosphere of the printing plant those days, and, experience however short, were helpful and appreciated by me.

"J.J." was very jovial in his occasional trip to the Job Print and did considerable kidding all in good fun. "Mac" was a witty person who mixed in a good natured sarcasm now and then for one reason or another. Eva most always had good answers to all the kidding she was called upon to take, and, generally held her own in a quiet sort of way, always busy setting type. We four all got along very well indeed. However, I do remember that some days did seem long and weary because of the monotony of some repetitious jobs.

In spite of the great demand for printing those last boom days of the twenties, business generally being brisk, it looked to me that people had to work long and hard to make any decent profit. There was including treatment of the hands. However, nails and finger ends were used and I was soon back to work.

Now and then a printing job had a dose on parchment paper which required a special kind of printers' ink which smelled very bad those days. I always dreaded it when "Mac" would do that job on the largest press, in spite of the fact that we always opened an outside door to lessen the effects on the constitution.

One of the jobs I had to do, being the junior and printers' devil on the staff, was to clean up now and then. One day not long after I started my job at the printing plant, I decided to clean the floor that apparently hadn't been cleaned in some considerable time.

"J.J." came along and said, "how are you making out Vince?" I assured him that I thought I was beginning to see the floor. "J.J." laughed very heartily, he thought the remark pretty good and suitable.

Sometimes the gasoline engine or a piece of machinery would refuse to work, and after "Mac" the fix-it man had patiently worked for a certain length of time to get it going again, without results, "Mac" would then stand back and cuss quite strenuously, then he would immediately start working. "See," he would say, "all it needed was a bit of cussing."

On other occasions when some gadget refused duty for me and, seemed to be broken, "Mac" would say, "use a little oil," and sure enough, often that is all it took. How often since, have I thought of the value of that remark and the actual need of "oil" in many life situations, applied at the right time, right place and, in the right way.

Other things that sort of stick in my memory and come to mind now and then are, like the time I told "Mac" of four teenage boys who in the spring season of 1929 got together just before dark one evening and decided to initiate the newly built outdoor Pines Hotel swimming pool which had just been filled with water. Clothes were taken off near the road just east of the pool; nobody else seemed to be around except the four boys; no thought or time for bathing suits up to the pool they went. They stood on the edge of the pool and looked at the chilly water, one soon jumped in, the rest quickly followed and across the pool they swam. "Mac" listened to the story and hardly said anything, but the next "Digby Courier" had a good story on the episode. The heading of the story went something like, "Four Boy Scouts Officially Open Pines Hotel Swimming Pool." Who were the four? Many years later they are known as: the late Dr. Earl H. Anderson, veteran of two wars (second world and Korean), was awarded the Victoria Cross; Sidney L. Smith, now prominent druggist for many years in Digby; Clayton D. Snow, Digby wholesale lobster king merchant; and myself.

As a young teenager I used to like doing some writing about different events interesting to myself and mostly for myself. One day "Mac" said to me "how about writing your version of the story told about 'The Marooning of Jerome'." I had heard and read at least two somewhat different stories about the man who was found marooned on a beach at some point on the French Shore of St. Mary's Bay, Digby County. When found this man's tongue had been cut out and his legs quite freshly amputated, were surgically well dressed and bound. He was presumably left by some vessel before dawn one morning, all for some mysterious reason.

"Jerome" appeared to have been a man of some considerable social standing and possibly of some considerable wealth. However the only thing the man could or would ever say after being found and cared for by some family in the French shore was, something that sounded like the word "Jerome". He either could not, or, would not, write anything about who he was or why he was left the way he was. Well, it was, and is, one of Digby County's mystery stories, and, different ideas have been expressed over the years concerning this man. However my response to "Mac" was, I felt no urge to write anything more or different about this man. The mystery seemed to have been very well explored in the mind of many people, and, he was a sort of curiosity for many people who visited where he lived for many years.

Three years later, I was quite alone in the street that I lived back and forth, led a boat clanking noise, powered by a small engine, and a "plur", and as I remember it, it was a "plur". "J.J." was noted for his sense of humor and his ability to make people laugh. In 1928 during the time Mr. Wallis was editor of the Scott Act (Prohibition Law) he was about and advocated by some people, and attached a boys' conference to the conference.

Digby 172 Years Ago

Compiled by David Sanford

From the files of the Courier of January 23, 1867, the following account has been copied concerning Digby in 1800.

"Among a number of old newspapers kindly sent to us by friends is a copy of the Saint John Gazette of May, 1802, says the Telegraph and among other advertisements contained in the issue before us is one describing the town and township of Digby, and offering for sale certain lots in the town. In this area we are told the township of Digby extends from the Gulf of Annapolis westward to the extremity of the province of Nova Scotia, and contains about 130,000 acres." The town plot is thus described:

"The Town Plot is situated at the east of the township just within the entrance to Annapolis Basin, and twenty miles from Annapolis Town, and six miles across land from the head of St. Mary's Bay. This laid out from the water's edge, partly on level ground and partly on the declivity of a modern hill, dry and pleasant, and having with an eastern aspect, a view of the Annapolis Basin and its cultivated shores for twenty miles in where it terminates with the Fort and River's mouth of that name. It was settled by Loyalists from New York in 1783, the most of whom went early to farms, or, moving to older countries, left the whole side to be bought proved by about who now reside detached, built dwellings with orchards, and some fishery and. It has communal parts of the communal provisions in a cheap, built readily to be from many circumstances, probability of place of some shipbuilding, the West India a cheap and of residence. This advertised at the December, 1802, were to be a No. 100.

free trade with the U.S.A., especially with the New England States. The question was then debated by some Digby High School students one of which was "J.J.'s" daughter, Florence (now Mrs. Melvin O. Tibert, Freeport, Digby Co.) Some days after the debate a man from some part of Nova Scotia came to the printing shop looking for Florence, one of the successful debaters; I had the impression that this man was interested politically but, maybe I was wrong.

Well, I felt that I had learned considerable from my short experience at "The Wallis Job Print". I was learning to do beginner jobs, receiving some knowledge about things like: embossing, stapling, perforating, counting, cutting and trimming paper stock, mixing inks for certain desired colors, and so forth, but, the only experience I had at setting type was just enough to make a "pi", the printers name for a confused mess.

There was a taste of trying to sell job printing outside the plant. Work was a little slack one early fall day and so "Mac" said to me, "how about trying your hand at taking orders for printed personalized Christmas cards?" I tried it, made several calls around town, spent most of the time at one particular house, and got an order, but,

Years and experiments with the last time I saw him of personal interest. The last time I saw him and talked with him was, after one day when he had been wanted to visit him at his home. He had been returned from the hospital after a week's absence. I made the visit and brought him some medicine and a bottle of medicine.

Newsboy's Annual Review.

Our Newsboy reclined in the Editor's chair, Flicked his fingers and after that down (Like the rose-strewn path of the Editor, Who tolls in a country town.)

His brow was drawn with the weight of thought.
In his eyes was a distant haze.
As he wrote the story of the past year's threads
In the loom of the fire's blaze.

He saw the new buildings that rose on the path
And the old houses that were broken down.
The "Fire" had left its mark on the town.
And daily looked sadly the word.

The plans for the Post Office then caught his eye
And his fingers flew from the pen.
"The new building," he said, "is a fine thing, But I don't like the way it's been done."

He saw the new houses that were built on the hill,
And the old houses that were broken down.
The "Fire" had left its mark on the town.
And daily looked sadly the word.

The tourist came also, as ever of yore,
And the old houses that were broken down.
The "Fire" had left its mark on the town.
And daily looked sadly the word.

The backmen fight etiquette sometimes forgot,
While they fought for a promising fair.
And the truckmen and Chief met the highway's lot
When they fought the Superintendent's chair.

The stout deep-sea fishermen still plied their trade
And the truckmen and Chief met the highway's lot.
When they fought the Superintendent's chair.

The Park with its "walks and driveways," he viewed,
And wished they had cleared up the ground.
The interest in sports might again be renewed
And the cheer of our athletes renewed.

The big silver medals they won in the raid Flash on the memory of the brave;
Our dashing militia have long been away,
They will not be "called out" (as they travel).

With banners and cannon and fiery shot.
The deeds of great Roberts were marked,
And the rocky battery, down the float,
Receded and away went the joyous gun-barked.

He looked to Africa far, in his mind,
And fitted for a face that he knew.
But all traces of Digby he left him behind,
So he hurriedly fled from the view.

He sighed for the country slipping away
And took a long peep at the new.
And the Chief told him in his morning
"The top is in the morning" to you.

No Flirtations.

No boarding house could have been more hospitable than the one in which Miss Conant lived. It was founded and conducted for the benefit of its inmates, and if Miss Conant incidentally bank a few dollars in the savings bank every week, she would not take a doubtful boarder at any price.

In the neighbourhood of Lincoln park Miss Conant's was a large, airy, model of permanency and conservatism in the shifting life of the city.

Miss Conant called her boarders "my children." She had the true mother's instinct, and though her boarders were of various ages and denied her a husband and children of her own, she had compensation in adopting her boarders. She loved and soiled them with an abandoned naturalness that was almost if not quite maternal.

Miss Conant had one iron bound, unbreakable rule. Within her hospitable walls there were to be no flirtations. In the beginning she believed this rule to be necessary. Her "children" were of both sexes and ranged from sixteen to thirty. She said that entanglements sometimes arose which destroyed the peace and serenity of home life. So she made her rule. As Miss Conant said, there was no nonsense about her young ladies and gentlemen. They lived together like brethren. The gentlemen played billiards and watched the horse races, pugilists and otherwise occupied themselves as respectable young men usually do. They met the ladies respectfully, even gallantly, but so far as the tender passion was concerned, they might have been wooden men.

Perhaps the young ladies secretly scorned the rule. Perhaps if the young men had tempted them there might have been flirtations and confused heartache and misery. But the temptations were lacking, there had been no violation of the rule and no instruction in Miss Conant's little realm.

Until Marcella came.

Miss Conant was doubtful of Mar-cella at the first moment, and the landlady looked on the unquestionable reference to the questionable young woman with great hesitation.

"The girl is too pretty, said Miss Conant, speaking to herself, of course.
She has no business to be so pretty, though, of course, she can't help it."

She was right. Undoubtedly something was wrong, and everything was wrong before Marcella came perhaps Miss Jones was justified in holding her responsible. At all events, Miss Conant decided to speak to Mar-cella. It was known that Will Beaver was the star boarder. He had a good business and a bright future, and Miss Conant was not going to have his heart filled with "nonsense."

The landlady was a diplomat. She called Marcella to her room and placed her arm gently about the girl's waist.

"Now allow are you, my dear? I ask you," said Miss Conant.

"Nineteen," said Marcella.

"You are young and you are very pretty, my child. You must be careful," said Miss Conant.

"I do not understand," said Mar-cella.

"I am going to speak to you in a motherly way, my dear. I must not accuse you, mind. But I must warn you. Flirtations are neither wise nor proper."

Marcella looked at the landlady in astonishment.

"This is not a summer hotel, continued Miss Conant. Neither is it a young ladies' seminary. It is a respectable boarding house, and the requirements of respect and propriety have rendered this rule imperative, no flirtations."

"What unusual and outrageous thing have you said to me? You should say this to me if I demanded it, but it will not be treated so. Tell me what you mean."

Your innocence is very creditable, my child, said Miss Conant, but you must have seen that Mr. Smith is absolutely attentive to you."

"I have not encouraged him. And Marcella was told."

"And that Mr. Craig makes a perfect spectacle of himself."

"I cannot help it," said Marcella.
She seemed indifferent.

"And Will Beaver? Is it not true, my child, that—"

"No, no, no, cried Marcella, blushing like a rose. Mr. Caruthers scarcely looks at me. He seems devoted to Miss Jones."

"I had noticed that," said Miss Conant, forgetting her diplomacy. I had observed it. But Miss Jones says that you—"

"Oh, indeed, said Marcella with fine scorn. I would thank Miss Jones to keep her lover to herself and not mention my name."

"I did not mean to offend you, child," said Miss Conant, wringing her hands in distress. "I am really quite puzzled. Everything is so queer. I quite proper in my house. But something is wrong, and I don't know what it is."

"I am very sorry, said Marcella coldly, but I assure you I have nothing to do with it. I promise you I will not break your ancient and respectable rules. I shall not flirt with Mr.
Craig nor with Mr. Smith, nor with any one else. I assure you I have nothing to do with it. I promise you I will not break your ancient and respectable rules. I shall not flirt with Mr.
Craig nor with Mr. Smith, nor with any one else."

And Marcella escaped to her room, there to peep in bitterness and despair, while Miss Conant, who was dismayed thus ever.

For time after this things seemed to mend, and Miss Conant ventured to compliment Marcella.

Will seemed to avoid Miss Jones, and she never saw him speak to Mar-cella.

But all the old familiar relations were broken up. Mr. Smith and Craig greeted each other with wonderful politeness in the house, but did not speak when they met on the street.
Marcella was certainly disappointed.
She regarded all the gentlemen with a coldness that was almost contempt.
She kept mostly in her room; and was not affected by Miss Jones' gay remark, Miss Beaver's persistent effusions.

Will wandered about the house in silent and moody contemplation. He could have been entering on account of his separation from Miss Jones, but he strangely refused to make up with her again.

This astute young woman ignored him at last and turned her attention to Mr. Craig. Strange to say he responded. Some old instinct seemed to revive in the bosom of this girl, and he was certain to succeed.
And that ladies were made for love.
And Miss Jones, being the lady most available, found herself beloved.

A little heaven leaveneth the whole mass.

Mr. Smith also yielded to the dominant force. He saw Marcella's persistent coldness and flattered to Miss Beaver for sympathy.

So a whispered discretion, that the landlady refused to listen. Perhaps it was fate.

Within a day Miss Conant observed certain signs of demoralization. Mr.
Craig, who for years had regularly bolted his food with great haste, now sat idly and lingered at the table.
Mr. Smith wore his best suit to the office. The card game was neglected, and the gentlemen gathered in the parlor, Will Caruthers talked softly and entertainingly to Miss Jones, though he watched Marcella out of the corner of his eye and blushed when she looked his way. Yes; Will blushed. It was a remarkable thing.
Miss Jones glared at Marcella, and Miss Beaver called Mr. Smith attention to the fact that the new girl painted her face. Mr. Smith pretended to believe it. The next day Marcella was seen to leave the house, though she hid him in her room the landlady was not blind.

The developments of a month filled Miss Conant with dismay. She felt it her duty to speak to Miss Jones, "I am really quite surprised at you," said the landlady. Why, if it were not so impossible and absurd I should say to you and Will amount seemed devoted to one another."

"I am trying to save him from that doll, that creature, said Miss Jones.

"Marcella? I asked the astonished landlady.

"Yes; Marcella. Her conduct is perfectly shameful. Haven't you seen how badly she angers for him?"

In fact, she thought Marcella seemed rather shy. But perhaps Miss Jones was right. Undoubtedly something was wrong, and everything was wrong before Marcella came per-

The Boy Who Turned Out Bad
The boy turned out bad and was raised by parents good and true.
They pondered what was best for him and what they might do.
He at last decided they would keep him home at night.
So he could not take a part in all the other boys' doings.
They never let him play with boys who went to their haunts and were bad.
They kept him from the swimming hole and kept him out of the street.
He never had a single fight and on all his lessons.
He with the other boys was never, never He never stole an apple from a neighbor's tree.
Because his mother's eagle eye was on him constantly.
He never saw a shadow because his parents always said.
They did not want extravagance in Tommy to begin with.
But when he grew up into years he decided one day to 'see'.
The other boys' joys of life have been destroyed.
And what a mischief in a boy is criminal in a man.

Then, asked Pearl, surprised, why do you turn, Captain John?
He pointed his hand to his shoulders, then, laughing slightly, answered:
"I think, because of the danger."
"Danger!" the word broke from Pearl's lips for the first time.
There is only danger to those who ride recklessly. They say you do. Is it that you do not mind?
Why should I mind that? The same laugh. Why should I mind that?
"Why? Pearl's heart was beating with thick, heavy beats. If not for yourself, you should; for he had been hurt. He should be in bed. With her, you should think of me. If harm came to you, don't you inquire—imagine that we should care?
He glanced up at her face, for a moment it was very sad.
Thank you, he remarked, in a low tone. "I am sure you would."
Heaven bless you, dear Pearl.
He lifted her hand to his lips, then abruptly turning, sprang into his own saddle. As they rode on, Michael Burton looking at his guest, remarked pleasantly:
"I was thinking that if it's a sin to envy our neighbor, I've committed the sin, was the response. I envy you that sweet young daughter, Pearl."
The father's countenance was radi-

She was "What sweet said. Ah, low dear she is to me!"

"I can imagine it. If I had wedded, I might have had such a daughter."

A BRITISH FLAG.
The Union Jack of England, its Origin and History.

The Flag that MAY BE ABOVE US WAS THE FIRST FLAG OF A DAY THAT BROKE OUT THE BRITISH EMPIRE—THE SHIELD OF ST. GEORGE GAVE ENGLAND HER FLAG.

There are many people, no doubt, who, if they have ever given the subject a thought, imagine that some clever or distinguished person took it into his head one day that Great Britain wanted a flag, and promptly designed one. As a matter of fact, the flag of the Union Jack was not more than a day or two from the British Empire. The flag of England dated to the year 1606 was the St. George's Jack, the Red Cross, the Red Cross Knight, is, of course, the patron saint of England. The shield of St. George gave England her flag—a red cross upon a white ground. This is the flag under which our fathers defended the Spanish Armada, and won our earlier naval successes, and they were as jealous of its honor as ever we can be of the Union Jack. In those days, the people who chose to fly his flag to the St. George's Jack, there by acknowledging England's sovereignty of the sea, was apt to find himself challenged to a duel. In the year 1554, in the reign of Mary II., when William Howard was sent with a fleet of 28 sail to the coast of Spain to escort the Princess Philip was accused of treason. Lord Howard, the Spanish admiral came along, very proudly with the Spanish flag flying at the main topmast head. He was told that he might find himself greeted with a good sound shot by Lord William Howard, who flatly refused to give the Prince any other welcome than the Spanish colors were hailed. Lord Howard, the young Lord again, Sir William Monson was cruising up and down with his fleet, with instructions to assert and convince the Spanish admiral that he was wrong. He was told that he might find himself greeted with a good sound shot by Lord William Howard, who flatly refused to give the Prince any other welcome than the Spanish colors were
hailed. Lord Howard, the young Lord

"I've been trying to get work," said the learned prisoner, "but you wouldn't let me." "What kind of work?" asked the warden. "Anything, your honor, so long as it's honest work." "What kind of wages?" asked the warden. "Wages is no object, your honor; all I ask is work, with food and clothing included." "And you'd do any kind of job?" asked the warden.

"I need, I would, your honor, only one thing," and the tears actually came into his eyes.

"Very well," said the magistrate, "I will give you a job with me, for food and clothing combined with your hard labor. Next case."

What the Engineer Said.

Clinton, Ont.—Our esteemed citizens, Mr. Goodsell, Engineer for the Electric & Gas Company, and Mr. C. J. Sullivan, that visited us last week, have been the cause of a very timely thing: "I have a favor to ask of you," said the engineer, "and I am sure you will do it." He was completely prostrated by a severe cold of the nose and throat. "My wife has been suffering very much," said the engineer, "and I have been so persistently and severely that I have almost lost her reason." The children were very much affected, especially the baby, and I have been so persistently and severely that I have almost lost her reason. "Our doctor's medicine has not helped me, and I am so slow in acting, so I went to a drug store and asked for the best cough medicine they had. It was given to me, and it made my family inhale it two minutes each day. The result was a speedy recovery."

“Are you aware how delicate the touch of a blind person is? When he deprives us of one sense, she amends by bringing the other to extraordinary acuteness. Let me illustrate this gentleman: I’m fed a second sugar and let him feel me and you will see how quickly he knows what it is.”

The blind man having entered, he put to the test. He put his thumb finger into the scoop and without faltering said, “That is sand.”

Almost Consumption

Dodds, of Pleasant Ave., Deer Park, writes: “I have suffered in my back for many years, and in the summer from a very heavy cold which I did not get rid of. I have tried several remedies, but am not relieved. I am now so weak that I cannot seem to be of any avail. I began to think that my cold was developing into consumption by a very many others have to my knowledge suffered from it. I have used Chase’s Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine

Sluggish, Torpid Liver

When the liver gets slow and sluggish in action bile is left in the blood, which poisons the whole system and gives rise to serious bodily derangements. When there are biliousness, headache, constipation and indigestion Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills make you well in surprisingly short time.

the backyard of Mr. Augustus Perry on Wednesday afternoon, and attacked the wood pile with great energy, after which Mrs. Perry gave them a sumptuous supper.

Our school is preparing for a concert to be given on the evening of the 2nd of April, at Mrs. Perry's. If there is any truth in the old saying that "Practice Makes Perfect" certainly this concert will be a success.

Mr. Edward Ruggles, who for some time has been suffering with paralysis, died yesterday last. The funeral took place on Wednesday. The burial service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Harris, the remains being interred in the Episcopal churchyard.

Miss Mabel Graham, of Centerville, has returned home via our Westport. We are having delightful weather here this week. Our front street is drying up rapidly.

The schooner Melrose arrived Saturday night between two and three o'clock, and was met by a tugboat. Capt. Maudslough has purchased a fishing boat called the Bertie Evans. We think it will be successful in his new industry.

S. S. Westport arrived from St. John Saturday evening with a full freight for the Westport. The schooner Melrose arrived Saturday night between two and three o'clock, and was met by a tugboat.

Mr. Charles Graham, who has been visiting his daughters and other relatives for the past three months, has returned home via our Westport. He was very much pleased to see his family and was well.
