1877-1977

Now and then a printing job had a save in parchment paper which required a special kind of printers' ink which smelled very bad some days. I always dreaded it when "Mac" would take you to the largest press in spite of the fact he always opened an outside door to lessen the odors on the room itself.

One of the jobs I had to do, besides putting and grinding down the staff, was to... I cleaned one and then... One day not long after I started to get to the grating plant. I decided to climb the floor that apparently hadn't been cleaned for some considerable time.

"J.J." came along and said, "how are you making out Vince?" I assured him that I thought I was beginning to see the floor. "J.J." laughed very heartily. He thought the remark pretty good and whole.

Sometimes the gasoline engine, a piece of machinery would refuse to work, and the "fix-it" man had patiently worked for a certain length of time to get it going again, without results. Max would then stand back and come over dramatically then he would immediately start working. "See," he would say, "all it needed was a bit of fixing."

On other occasions when some people would say, "let's be a little off" and vice versa, often that is all it took. They often since have a respect of the value of that remark and the actual need of "off" in many life situations, applied at the right time, right place and in the right way.

(Other things that sort of stick in my memory and come to mind now and then are, like the time I took "Mae" of four teenage boys who in the spring season of 1958 got together just before dark one evening and decided to mutilate the newly built outdoor Davis Hotel swimming pool which had just been filled with water. Clothes were taken off near the road just out of the road, nobody else seemed to be around except the four Clothes were taken out and laid on the grass. The four pool, nobody else seemed to be around except the four boys, no thought or time for bathing suits, so in the pool they went. They stood on the edge of the pool and looked at the chilly water, one soon jumped in. The rest quickly followed and across the pool they swam. "Mac" inferred to the story and hardly said anything, but the next "Digby Courier" had a good story on the episode. The heading of the story went something like, "Four Boy Swims Officially Open Pines Hotel Swimming Pool." Who were the four? Many years later (they are known as: the late Dr. Earl H. Anderson, veteran of two wars (second World War), Kenneth, was awarded the Victoria Cross; Sidney L. Smith, now prominent druggist, for many years in Digby; Clayton D. Snow, Digby wholesale hardware merchant, and myself.

As a young treasurer I used to like doing some writing about different events interesting to myself and mostly for myself. One day I was told to write about writing your version of the story told about "The Marooning of Jerome." I did it and read at least two somewhat different versions of the man who was found marooned on a beach at some point on the French Shore of St. Mary's Bay, Duxbury County. When found this man's torso and legs were surgically well dressed and bound. He was presumably left by some vessel later than one morning, all for some mysterious reason.

"Jimenez" appeared to have been a man of some considerable social standing and, possibly, considerable wealth. However, the only thing he could or would ever say after being asked to talk for his family in the French about anything that sounded like the name before he either could not, or would not, speak, was that who he was or why he was left there was not his business. And is, one of Diego's Cousins, and, different ideas have been expressed in the years concerning this man. However, "Mig" was, I felt no urge to say anything different about this man. The only thing I have been very well equipped to do is to listen, and he was a sort of

From the files of the Chamber of January 23, 1967, the following account has been copied concerning Dwight D. Davis:

The Town Plot is situated at the east of the township just within the entrance to Annapolis Bay, and twenty miles from Annapolis Town, and six miles distant from the head of H. Mary's Bay. This land, and not from the water's edge, partly is level ground, and partly on the declivity of a modern hill, dry and pleasant, and having with an eastern aspect a view of the Annapolis Bay, and its cultivated shores for twenty miles in extent, it terminates with the Fort and River's mouth at that name. It was secured by Leyden's tract, New York in 1683, the grant of which went nearly to fashion, as, moving to other countries, left the whole

The Louisiana Lottery Bill, which was amended in the Senate so that the amount to be paid to the State for the privilege of doing business was raised to $1,150,000 a year, was concurred in by the House at Baton Rouge yesterday by a vote of 68 to 25.

Sir Fred Middleton has given up his office in the government building and will shortly dispose of his household effects at auction. His successor will be an Imperial officer. Sir John is in communication with Lord Stanley in regard to the matter.

Dr. Talmage receives $15,000 a year from his Brooklyn congregation, $12,500 from a firm for the advance publication of his sermons, $3,500 for his contributions to a religious journal, besides what he earns on the lecture platform and from general literary work.

The exhibition to take place next January at Jamaica is one that is worthy the attention of our merchants and manufacturers. A wise business man never loses an opportunity to widen his market and increase his sales, and as we have won much better facilities than ever before for carrying on business with the West India Islands, this excellent opportunity to show what we have to sell should be made the most of. It is to be hoped that our people will go into the matter vigorously, and that the Nova Scotia exhibit will be one of the most attractive.

The London and Hamilton papers take anything but a christian view of the failure of the Toronto carnival. On the contrary they take no pains to conceal their satisfaction, and they are not greatly to be blamed. Toronto has an exhibition every year that is made use of to advertise the city extensively and to rake in the pockets of the people of the other cities of the province. The Hamilton people last year undertook to get up an attraction of their own by organizing a summer carnival. Some of the greedy Toronto people, not content with what they could make out of their exhibition, tried to do the Hamilton people out of their carnival by organizing one that was to be bigger and grander in every respect. Like most greedy people they have failed, and they are not much to be pitied.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, July 4, 1890.
The whiffing of politics brings about strange changes. Fifteen years ago an attempt was made in Congress to pass a Federal election law. Then, as now, the argument was made that such a law was needed for the protection of the Republican voters, white and colored, in the Southern States. At this time it cannot be successfully denied by the most violent advocate of the Lodge bill that there was more need of Federal election laws then, if ever at all, there is now. To a large portion of the Republican party at that time it seemed as though Federal interference would be justified. In the House there was every prospect that what was known as the Force Bill would pass. At that time, as now, the speaker's chair was occupied by a man from Maine, James G. Blaine. At a critical point in the heated contest he threw the weight of his power against the bill, and it was defeated, and from that time when Mr. Blaine's name was brought forward as a candidate for the Presidency, he opposed him, giving as his reason for doing so, his course in defeating legislation which they claimed to be for the protection of the Southern States.

One of the strange changes brought about by the whiffing of politics is that the men now most prominent in advocating a measure similar to the one defeated by Mr. Blaine, from the day of his death, have been such legislation, gathered about him, and for twelve years they made him the idol of the Republican party. When an opponent of Mr. Blaine gave as a reason for his opposition to Blaine's course on the Force bill, his champions who are now the foremost champions of Federal legislation, were strong in their denunciation of such opposition. Mr. Blaine, then, in his opposition to the Force bill, was honest, in his convictions, and in their opposition to Blaine, were told that there was no place in the Republican party for them. For twelve years these men clamored and fought for the election of Blaine to the Presidency of the one man who had defeated the legislation they are to-day so hotly contending for.

While there is life there is hope, but to a majority of the Republican politicians, so far as they are personally concerned, life and hope both went out a long time ago. As these claims are nearly a hundred years old, the opposition for which a Government settled with France having been committed before the beginning of the present century or thereabouts, it would seem as if sufficient time had already elapsed for their proper ascertainment. Indeed, if tradition be true, they have been ascertained over and over again, but as generations pass away and new sets of heirs appear upon the scene, it becomes necessary to keep on repeating the process.

It would seem as if a claim that had once been approved might be paid without being required to pay the allowance of another claim, ten, twenty, or thirty years later, especially after Uncle Sam has had its use for nearly a century; but that is not the way the Government transacts its business. There is nothing to be done but to settle the claims in a lump sum and make a prompt end of it. Hence it is not surprising to read in the report of the Senate's proceedings on Saturday that a bill was passed providing that the time for filing claims in the Court of Claims, under an act approved January 20, 1875, be extended for an additional term of twelve months. This is a very commendable and will doubtless operate on the old claimants like a dose of brown sugar's elixir.

The enforcement of such a law as the proposed Federal election law will saddle upon the country an expense nationally estimated at from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 for every election held. It will cost a million and a half dollars for chief supervisors, four to five millions for deputy marshals. In view of this, the question to be considered is whether the people in the present condition of the national finances, and in the depressed financial condition that they themselves are in, are prepared to expend this much money for a mere partisan intrigue, and whether they are ready to proclaim upon the stump this fall that $15,000,000 spent every two years on an army of political supernumeraries will produce better fruit than the same amount spent in school-houses and school books or on works of necessary public improvement. These are serious questions to be put off without answer until the day of reckoning, when answers will be of no avail. The senator who is wise will put his ear to the ground and listen to the coming storm before it is too late. Young men are coming in from both houses of Congress. Some new timber is needed in the old ship of state.

Canada were in attendance. Wm. B. Lynch, senior member of the firm of Lynch Bros., Digby, died at his father's residence, at 3 a. m. yesterday. He had been confined for the past three or four weeks with rheumatic fever, which terminated in paralysis of the lower extremities. August McMillan, an elderly man belonging to St. Andrews, Ontario, was committed to jail on Tuesday for assault. He is undoubtedly insane and very violent. Since his arrest he has been in the custody of his cell together with what simple furniture it contained, and it has been deemed absolutely necessary to keep him handcuffed and caged in his cell, until such time as his relatives, who are said to be very respectable people, can be communicated with.

He was allowed to roam about town on Saturday afternoon until the evening; when it was deemed prudent by the police to place him in the asylum. He was examined on Monday and pronounced insane, since which time he has, at intervals, been violent. He will probably be sent to an asylum. It is thought that the loss of his vessel on the Bay of Fundy, and recently, without any insurance, has unbalanced his mind.

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease, Consumption. Ask yourselves if you can afford for the sake of saving 50 cents, to turn the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your cough. It never fails. This cure is worth more than a Million Bottles would cost the past year. It relieved a Croup and Whooping Cough at once. Mothers do not be without it. Adrift in The Bay.
The schooner Laura, which went ashore on Gull Rock recently, had been drifting about the Bay of Fundy this week. She was sighted by lighthouse-keeper Ellis on Wednesday, who reported her to Capt. R. McArthur. The tug-boat was dispatched to examine the wreck, and after viewing her, it was decided that she was not worth towing, and was left to her fate.

A large number gathered at the Methodist church on Saturday evening last, to listen to the Rev. R. McArthur's farewell sermon. A detachment of sailors and marines from H. M. S. Canada were in attendance. The Rev. gentleman preached a very impressive sermon, at the end of which he made a few well chosen remarks relative to the progress of the church during his three years of pastoral duty.

Wm. B. Lynch, senior member of the firm of Lynch Bros., Digby, died at his father's residence, at 3 a. m. yesterday. He had been confined for the past three or four weeks with rheumatic fever, which terminated in paralysis of the lower extremities. Mr. Lynch was an industrious and steady young man, and his demise, so young, is sadly regretted by relatives and numerous young friends. The remains were taken to St. John yesterday for interment.

August McMillan, an elderly man belonging to St. Andrews, Ontario, was committed to jail on Tuesday for assault. He is undoubtedly insane and very violent. Since his arrest he has been in the custody of his cell together with what simple furniture it contained, and it has been deemed absolutely necessary to keep him handcuffed and caged in his cell, until such time as his relatives, who are said to be very respectable people, can be communicated with.

On Sunday evening week, the Foresters of Court Admiral Digby met at their lodge room, and being joined by a number of brethren from Weymouth and Bear River, marched in procession to the Methodist church, where a sermon was preached by the Rev. R. McArthur.

Mr. H. M. S. Canada, Capt. Dowling, arrived here Sunday morning from Minas Basin. She was visited by a large number during Sunday. She carries 10 guns, is 2,350 tons, and has 134 crew. Her captain is Capt. H. M. S. Canada, first lieutenant, Harry C. Reynolds; staff surgeon, Thomas M. Stubbins; paymaster, Charles Farver; engineer, Joseph Monk. She carries about 300 men.

Mr. V. E. Zerkow, of Sackville, is setting as pilot. She sailed for Annapolis on Monday, where she remained until Wednesday. A friendly match at cricket was played with an eleven of that town on Tuesday, the officers of the Canada being defeated.

Capt. R. Saunders, of Sandy Cove, Digby Neck, who was arrested by the St. John police on Thursday last week, supposed to be insane, was brought here by Dr. McArthur, and handed over to the authorities. He was allowed to roam about town on Saturday afternoon until the evening; when it was deemed prudent by the police to place him in the asylum. He was examined on Monday and pronounced insane, since which time he has, at intervals, been violent. He will probably be sent to an asylum. It is thought that the loss of his vessel on the Bay of Fundy, and recently, without any insurance, has unbalanced his mind.

THE DEEP WATER PIER.

We wish to call the attention of those responsible for the construction of our deep water pier to the fact that the summer is fast slipping away, and not a single step that is apparent to the public, has yet been taken for that purpose. We are speaking on the assumption that it is intended to commence its construction this year, as it would be one of the greatest mistakes to postpone it for another season, and believing this, we would urge the necessity of calling for tenders without further delay. The construction of public works, and such as always seems to be ever attended with difficulties which are intangible, but have to be overcome. We had a notable instance of this in the completion of the "missing link" and we have had another instance of it in the construction of this pier, which is a necessity arising from the completion of the railway, and which seems ever to prevent its being erected.

Forty thousand dollars were voted for this purpose, but never expended, a small difference of opinion as to its exact location, and such as always seems to be ever attended with difficulties which are intangible, but have to be overcome. We had a notable instance of this in the completion of the "missing link" and we have had another instance of it in the construction of this pier, which is a necessity arising from the completion of the railway, and which seems ever to prevent its being erected.

We are not saying this for the purpose of fault-finding, or to create any bad feeling in any way, but simply because we cannot stand any more haggling or unnecessary delay. It is in the interest of Digby, and of Digby County, as well as of all western Nova Scotia, that this wharf should be built. We have been promised it. The money has been voted for it, and we look for the government to act in good faith with us and begin the work.

The English correspondent of the New York Sun says that a "startling demonstration of the destructive power of the famous Brennan torpedo, purchased by the British government for $500,000, was made off the Isle of Wight in the presence of the secretary for war and a large number of naval and military experts. The old man-of-war Harpy was towed into the Solent, and as soon as she was sighted from the cliff at Fort Brennan a torpedo was sent to meet her. The torpedo, guided from the fort played around the doomed ship at will, following every movement of her. After a few minutes of preliminary evolutions the torpedo struck home. There was a tremendous shock, which caused the land to tremble for a few seconds, followed by a dense dark cloud and fragments of timber. When the smoke cleared it was seen that about a third of her majesty's ship Harpy had been torn and masts had gone by the board. In about a minute she commenced to sink, and two minutes later she had quite disappeared." The remarkable feature about this torpedo is not its destructive power when exploded as the unerring certainty with which it can be directed against an enemy's ship, made to follow her movements, and then at a favorable moment made to dart in and explode with deadly effect.

An upper province paper publishes a number of rules that it says should be rigidly observed by pleasure parties in row boats. They are addressed to persons not familiar with boats, and are these: "Don't stand up in the boat. Don't tangle in any frolics. Don't use chairs or seats. By observing the greatest care a change may be successfully accomplished; but it is dangerous. Don't lean over the side of the boat and reach for objects in the water, especially if the boat is overloaded. Don't rock. An involuntary movement on the part of a companion may carry it further than you intended and throw all hands overboard. If upset from a small boat don't try to climb into it." In addition to the above, people who need to have such rules laid down for their guidance would do well not to get into a boat at all. The observance of this rule will be a better preventive of boating accidents than any of the others.

The New Railway.

The Spectator says: "The Bridge at Allen's Creek is nearly completed and the track laid on. An engine and cars will soon be placed on the track for the purpose of testing it. The first cars have been run into the Annapolis and Digby Railway from the W. & A. Railway. On Monday a number of cars of sleepers arrived from the Nova Scotia Central and were shunted off on the new road."

The work of grading, generally, is nearly completed. A number of men are working at Gilpin's point at the south end of the town. The bridge at Bear River is getting along slowly. It is said considerable difficulty is experienced in getting up the pier. Mr. Schreiber, engineer in chief of government railways, is expected daily.

Mr. F. W. Dakin of this town, recently received the sad intelligence of the death of his brother, A. Walter Dakin, who passed away at his residence, 40 Mercer St., Jersey City, N. J., on the 22nd ult. The deceased was born at Digby, N. S., in 1835. He was in the drug business, having served his time many years ago with Wm. O. Smith, of St. John, and in 1854 he left for the United States, where he soon became owner of a prosperous and profitable business. Of late, however, his health had been failing, and he had disposed of his entire stock and closed up his business, contemplating a removal to Windsor to reside as he hoped that a change of climate might be beneficial to his health. The Evening Journal, of Jersey City, says that he was struck and stunned, if not killed, by some of the pieces of plaster thrown to his relief. She had been playing tennis, and was returning home, when her aged father met her and persuaded her to accept of his inclination to accompany him to "see the new ferryboat." The father, who is nearly seventy, is very old and may not recover.

The Cherry Carnival at Bear River.

Notwithstanding the fact that Tuesday morning dawned a little dark and cloudy, with a mild suggestion of rain, the staunch and sturdy old veterans, the old veterans, Capt. Robbison, at the helm, conveyed a goodly number of people to Bear River to attend the cherry carnival held in that village. The trip up the river proved delightful. The scenery is very grand; on either hand are towering hills far above our heads; at the very summit and upon the hillside we catch a glimpse of pretty little white cottages, peeping modestly down from among green trees. As a young Broad Cove lady remarks, the scenery is very suggestive of the Rhine.

Frank, one of our party—a young gent who had been up the river before—related to a very attentive audience, how, on a former occasion, the steamer had grounded on the east bank of the river, listing towards the shore, when a huge boulder of granite came tumbling down the steep cliff and struck the steamer, causing no damage whatever. Hearing no "groans" after the thrilling narrative, we came to the conclusion that it was accepted as a fact.

"Cos," the funny man of the crowd, amused the passengers—and himself as well—and doubtless believes that the order of an experiment would not be dampened by the anticipation of consequences.

Arriving at Bear River the excursionists were met on the wharf by the Bear River steamer. At 10 o'clock the sum. W. M. Weatherhead, in command of Capt. Corbett, arrived from Annapolis with a large number of excursionists, accompanied by the Annapolis band. Many persons came in carriages from all parts of the county, and fully two thousand people were present. The push, energy, and go-aheadiveness of Bear River people is universally known, and they certainly worked hard to successfully carry out the day's sports. The day was everything that could be desired in the way of fine weather.

A notable misfortune was the absence of the luscious cherry, the fruit not yet being ripe, but by the latter part of the week they will be in abundance. However, we managed to secure a few. This was done by a funny man, and he got very generous. Seating himself under the shade of some trees by the roadside he invited everybody in a very earnest manner, to "help yourselves" to the cherries and get the only place in Bear River where you can enjoy a real, live, cherry carnival.

The aquatic sports and running races came off in the morning. We noticed the absence of Bear River or Digby aspirants of the "sprint," the foot races being contested only by Annapolis amateurs. In the afternoon the athletic sports were commenced, and about 3 o'clock, after which everybody took themselves to the horse races.

The ladies of the Methodist church held a tea meeting during the day, where the wants of the inner man were supplied. Dinner was served on the European plan, proving quite a novelty in the way of tea meetings. The handsome sum of $700 was realized.

Altogether a very enjoyable day was spent. We felt sad, though, when we heard some young ladies declare they had not enjoyed themselves. They have our sympathy. We also extend our extreme sympathy to the young man who, after lavishing his time to say nothing of his loose change—at a fancy talk presided over by a pretty girl, and finally "left" when he went off with another chap.

The Hillsdale Cornet Band, of Annapolis, under the leadership of Mr. P. F. Ritchie, discoursed sweet music during the day. At 8 o'clock in the evening the whistle of the Evangelist sounded, warning us that the time had arrived when we must bid adieu to Bear River. Its pretty girls and cherries—carrying with us pleasant recollections of an enjoyable day well spent.

A special term of the supreme court, presided over by Judge Weatherhead, opened in Digby, on Tuesday and closed Thursday afternoon. All the causes that could not be reached on the docket at the general term in June were disposed of.

In addition to the members of the local bar there were present the following legal gentlemen, who took part in the trials and arguments of the causes, namely: Mr. Cowling, Annapolis; Mr. Pelton and Mr. Smith, of Weymouth; and Mr. Armstrong, of Weymouth.

International Cricket.

PHILADELPHIA, July 15.—In the international cricket match, Canada versus the United States, the Canadian team to-day finished their first inning with a total of 141 runs, and immediately started their second and made 97 runs. This gave them a total of 238 for two innings, 31 less than the United States made in its single inning yesterday. The match team was the easy winner of the match.

Canada was represented by the following team: Boyd, Toronto; Gillespie, Hamilton; Sanderson, Toronto; McEwen and Ferrie, Hamilton; Flury, Sengler and Cameron, Toronto; Little, Ottawa; Capt. Hamilton, Halifax; Lyons, Rosdale. Boyd captained the team, J. Wright officiated as umpire, and H. Collins as scorer.

Malachy Boves Daly, the new Lieutenant-Governor of this province, was sworn into office on Monday. He is the son of St. Dominic Daly, an Irishman, who was born in the City of New York, and was private secretary to Sir Richard G. MacDonald, Sir Hastings Doyle and Sir Fenwick Williams, former governors of Nova Scotia. He has represented the House of Commons for the riding of St. John's, and is the first Roman Catholic who has been appointed to the governorship of this province.

An especially sad occurrence in connection with the accident at Dartmouth, on Friday night, was the death of Miss Foster, who it is believed was struck and stunned, if not killed, by some of the pieces of plaster thrown to her relief. She had been playing tennis, and was returning home, when her aged father met her and persuaded her to accept of his inclination to accompany him to "see the new ferryboat." The father, who is nearly seventy, is very old and may not recover.

The gold bearing quartz discovered in the deep railway cutting near Victoria bridge, has been subjected to an assay. It returned a result of 1.5 per cent. gold. The following is the result: No. 1 seam, quartz (gold) $42 per ton, silver none. No. 2, $31.60. No. 3, quartz and slate, $28.00. No. 4, slate, $10.40. This appears to settle the question of the existence of gold in this county. No. 1 seam averages 14 inches in width; the others are wider.

The weather is very fine; too dry for growing crops, but very favorable to hay makers. Some days the thermometer has been for a short time above 90°, which is pretty warm for Digby. Our proximity to the sea, and the fact that the wind is agreeable. There are many visitors in town, and as many more would be here if they could procure accommodation. Cherries are in short crop, but strawberries are abundant. Green peas and new potatoes are becoming plentiful.

The recital by Mr. Shaw, instructor in elocution at Acadia College, in the Baptist hall, on Tuesday evening was one of the best entertainment of the kind since Mrs. Siddons, the queen of dramatic renderings, entertained and delighted a Digby audience. Mr. Shaw recited a number of pieces, and everything he was able to recite well, and in both these requirements Mr. Shaw showed his superiority. Several things tended to prevent the attendance on Tuesday evening being as large as it should have been. Mr. Shaw has only attended to the general wish of those who were not, as well as of those who were present, in giving another entertainment this evening. We have no doubt that the house will be filled, as we know there are enough who appreciate fine impersonation and tasteful rendering to fill the hall, and those we expect to see present.

PERSONALS.

A telegram has been received by Mr. E. B. Bidden, informing him that his son Herbert, who recently went to the Pacific coast, is ill at Seattle, W. T., with typhoid fever, but that he is doing well. To the Editor of the Courier.

Sir,—I noticed the comments of "Sincere" in your issue before the last, upon anonymous letter writers, who sign themselves friends; but what would you say to an individual that would send your name to please? Let me assure Mr. Sanderson that the person who wrote "Consideration" in your paper is not the same person who handled him the note he refers to in your last issue. No, not by any means. What is it to me whether Mr. Sanderson told Hogue or not? Has he not a right to tell it if he wants to? I am not aware that it is considered in Digby an illegal business or a disreputable one; then why single him out? Let me say that I am satisfied that Mr. Sanderson did not tell Hogue, but that is not the point. If he wants to tell why should he not? Let some one answer. Mr. Sanderson says "I should clear up the dirt which lies around Westport." But why? It is not correct; but could it not be better to clear up the whole town, back yards, front yards, all around the house, in fact, dig cellar drains, clean in garages, make a general cleaning up of it, fumigate the atmosphere. It would be useless to particularize. The air is bad.

TRURO, N. S., July 16, '90.

To the Editor of the Courier.

Having regularly received through the columns of your paper the news from the western part of the province, I thought a few notes from the town of Truro might be interesting to many of your readers.

This town being the junction of many railway lines of the province, trade naturally centres here; while the shady trees and parks are, to the many visitors to the town, as the "shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

Truro being at the head of provincial education, we must not forget to mention the closing of the Normal School term (Wednesday). Prominent features of the exercises were the discussion of Central Educational Principles, the reading of Essays and Music, together with addresses from the Superintendent of Education, Provincial Secretary and Attorney-General, all of whom agreed that the session just closed had been one of the most successful in the history of the Normal School. A large number of diplomas were awarded, and among these obtaining diplomas of the First Class, we notice Miss Eunice Gates, Miss Julia Kinney and Mr. Lyman Denton, all of Digby County.

Town Council.

DIGBY, July 16th, 1890.

A meeting of the town council was held in the supreme court room at the court house on the evening of this day.

The meeting was called to order by the Mayor at half past eight o'clock. All the councillors were present.

After the reading and confirmation of the minutes of the previous meeting, the principal item on the agenda was the question of licenses, was then taken up. It was decided to continue the discussion to the consideration of rules to regulate the issuance of licenses to local peddlers and hawkers.

After debating a resolution to exempt the farmer and the aboriginal from taking out licenses to enable them to peddle from door to door about the town, the product of their labor upon the farm or sea, the following resolutions were offered and passed:

Moved by coun. Bidden and second by coun. Wood that all farmers residing without the town limits, and who are not peddlers of the town, shall be permitted to sell, in the town of Digby, the product of their farm, of any description, whether, without license; provided, nevertheless, that meats of any kind shall not be sold or traded in larger quantities than one quarter of the carcass.

Coun. Turnbull offered an amendment to the foregoing resolution, the motion passed without amendment.

It was moved by coun. Bidden, seconded by coun. Bidden that persons not being rate-payers of the town, who fish, and sell their catch within the town, shall first obtain a license; but persons proving to the satisfaction of the Mayor or the license committee that the fish which they are exposing for sale through the town, are the product of their individual labor upon the sea, shall be free to sell, or dispose of the same, without license. Carried.

On motion of coun. Bidden, seconded by coun. Bidden it was ordered that the police constables of the town be instructed to report all persons peddling or hawking goods within the town limits, otherwise than as provided, without having first obtained a license therefor, and to report by paid text to the agent of the license fee, or of the fee collected, as a remuneration for his services.

The finance committee reported upon the foregoing bill, and recommended them for passing.

Messrs Boves & Sons, Halifax, for supplying set of books for town clerk and treasurer and for the municipal and police courts, $54.40.

LEB. Robertson, St. John, for corporate seal and municipal coat seal, $19.00.

On motion of coun. Wood the said bills were ordered to be paid.

Read report of John Bingay, sanitary inspector, as to certain sink drains, and other nuisances on water street, north end, recommending that immediate action be taken to remove the said nuisances.

On report of coun. Wood, it was ordered that the said report be referred back to the inspector for the purpose of associating one of the other two inspectors with him upon his recommendation to council; at this council, on presentation of a majority report by the Sanitary inspectors of the town, upon the nuisances referred to, will then take action.

Coun. Wood gave notice that, at the next regular meeting, he would ask whether it is the intention of this council to take steps to repossess the town of those portions of the public highways, in the town, now fenced in and otherwise encroached upon, by private individuals.

The treasurer was instructed to take immediate steps to enforce the collection of the dog tax against all persons owning dogs having dogs in the present season, and to issue his warrant against the parties who have not paid in their street tax or, at his option, send the delinquents in the municipal pound.

Coun. Wood gave notice that he would move at the next meeting for the appointment of fire wards and fire constables.

Meeting of the Town Council, Telephone Co., Limited.

A report of the financial condition of the company of June 30, 1890, was placed before the directors, and was read and approved at the annual meeting. This report showed a balance in favor of the company equal to about $2 per cent. on the capital stock.

The matter of the election of directors was taken up. But since directors cannot be elected in special meeting of the company, this matter was allowed to rest until the next annual meeting in accordance with chapter 79, section 31, Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia, fifth series.

Oh, let us reconstruct our platform of moral suasion and make a new start! Put upon this platform the right kind of men and women, and in twenty years this cause will be under such a boom of enthusiasm and power that the grog shops will have to sell beer and wine. Having established a platform, put upon it a document, a great document that has saved thousands and tens of thousands of people—a document that an archangel would not be ashamed to unveil—a document somewhat yellow with age and blotted with tears—the old-fashioned temperance pledge. Spread it on every platform, on every pulp-stair, and on every common-sense table. I hear some one sneer and say: "If they do sign the temperance pledge they will break it." Some of them are liars. But I do not believe all men are liars. [Laughter.] There are thousands of persons who, having made a promise, will keep it to the day of judgment. Yet the old temperance pledge is out of fashion, and I do not believe out of all this audience there is a temperance pledge. And if some poor drunkard, seeing the lights in this church to-night, should come in and at the close of the meeting want with his trembling hand to sign a temperance pledge, we would have to fly around and tear out a leaf from an old memorandum-book to get his signature.

Yes, I know that in some parts of the land the temperance pledge is still doing its work. Many years ago at the close of one of my services in Brooklyn, I saw a man in a pew near the pulpit who seemed to be weeping bitterly. I went to him and said: "You seem to be in trouble."

"Yes," said he, "I am the victim of strong drink. I had a beautiful wife and four lovely children, and I have ruined them all by my dissipation. I live in the far West and have had great prominence, and if I should tell you my name you would know it. I came here this morning and this evening, hoping you could do me some good, but you can't. No one can do me any good. Yesterday, coming down on the Hudson River Railroad, I felt that I was somewhat getting free from my evil habit, when a man seated next to me handed me a bottle of intoxicating liquor. It seemed as if the red tongue of the liquor was thrust up around the cork, as if it said: 'Take me! take me!' In horror I started out in the aisle of the car to the platform, thinking I would jump off. But the train was going forty miles an hour, and I did not dare to jump."

"Well," I said come into this room, and we will talk with you and pray with you. We entered the room where there were five or six Christian men, and without any circumlocution we commenced his case to God. Then the poor man and I started up Fulton Street. Coming opposite a drug store, we went in and I said: "Doctor, can you give this man something without any alcohol in it, that will help him when the paroxysm of thirst for strong drink comes on?" The bottle was prepared. I said to the drug-gist: "How long will this probably last the man?" He said: "Perhaps two or three weeks." I said: "Prepare another bottle." And with these bottles in his pocket we started out on the street, and I said to the poor man: "Put your trust in God, and when these paroxysms of thirst come on, take some of this medicine and God will see you through."

[Great applause.] A few weeks afterward I received a letter from Boston, saying: "Enclosed are two dollars you paid for that medicine the other night to help a poor drunkard. I send you also the Boston newspapers, showing that I have been, night after night to large audiences, preaching righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come. The thirst for rum has entirely left me, and I did not have to take one drop of the medicine. God has seen me through." Years passed on and I heard nothing of that man. Some of my friends said: "Have you heard from the drunkard about whom you told me?" They said: "No, I guess you won't hear again; I guess he has probably gone back to his evil habits." You know there is a great deal of infidelity in the Church.

Years passed on, and one summer, while I was attending a large outdoor meeting in Indiana at the close of the service a man came up and putting on his hands said: "Do you know me?" I replied: "I have no knowledge of ever having seen you before." He said: "I am the man who was in your church one Sunday night in great trouble about his habit of strong drink, and you took me into the side room for prayers, and afterwards took me up to the drug-store for medicine. I am the man. I have not touched a drop of intoxicating liquor since that time. Even the temptation has disappeared. I have ever since been engaged in lecturing and preaching in behalf of the temperance cause, and have secured over fifteen thousand signatures to the temperance pledge." [Renewed applause.] In all our land giving the temperance pledge a new start.

Having established a new platform of moral suasion and unrolled from it the temperance pledge, let us quit quarreling among ourselves. [Applause.] It is high time that all controversies between temperance men cease. Don't let us have any Big Bothers fight in the fog shot at each other supposing them to be enemies. If you will forgive me for differing from you, I will forgive you for differing from me. [Laughter.] What we want now is to mass all our troops of all shades of belief. Hook off in many directions, and see the regiments of reform are doing a splendid work. Some of them are shooting this way, and some are shooting that way, and some are shooting into the air. Standing on this anniversary mountain, I put the field-glass to my eye and I look off in one direction, and I see the regiments of the Sons of Temperance, who have already saved enough men to make a good-sized heaven. [Laughter and applause.]

Good cheer to them! I put the field-glass to my eye and I look off in another direction, and I see the regiments of the Good Templars, who are gridding the earth with their benedictions. They have a pass-word in their association. I know not what it is, but I suggest as the pass-word most appropriate for them the word "Victory." Good cheer to them! I look off in another direction, and I see the regiments of the Redemptists, who since 1835 have been filling the air with sounds of mercy and emancipation and the crash of broken wine pitchers. Good cheer to them! I put the field-glass to my eye and I look off in another direction, and I see the regiments of brave women. These are the Deborahs who fear not to go out and fight the iron chariots of opposition when even the knees of Benam tremble. Good cheer to them! I put the field-glass to my eye and I look off again, and I see the great regiments of the Prohibitionists, who are doing their chief work in the establishment of the laws which should make the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor an impossibility. And God will in the end give them complete success, even though, Supreme Courts should revoke all favorable decisions. [Applause.] There is a higher power than human power. No one can doubt the issue if ever there should be placed upon the calendar a case like this: "The Lord God Almighty versus the Supreme Court of the United States." About the result of such a contest there can be no uncertainty.

Mass all the troops, all the regiments of temperance reform, not for a Bridge of Gold, but for a Waterloo. Why not a Waterloo? We have enough men; we have enough artillery; we have enough courage; we have enough Wellingtons; we have enough Bluchers; we have enough reinforcements; and coming in on our side is the God of Samuel and David and Joshua—him of Megiddo him of the Valley of Ajalon. The Lord of hosts now strikes His hand upon His thigh until the sword rattles in His buckle, while he declares that no weapon formed against us shall prosper. It has been decreed in high heaven that sin must go down and righteousness must triumph. Do you believe in our final victory; if not, get out! Cross over to the other side. Better is an armed foe than a weak-kneed coward.

I suppose that it seemed ridiculous when Moses stretched out his hand over the Red Sea. What power could that have over the waters? But the east wind blew all night, the waters gave way, and the Israelites were saved. Better is an armed foe than a weak-kneed coward.

I suppose that it seemed ridiculous when Moses stretched out his hand over the Red Sea. What power could that have over the waters? But the east wind blew all night, the waters gave way, and the Israelites were saved. The Lord of hosts now strikes His hand upon His thigh until the sword rattles in His buckle, while he declares that no weapon formed against us shall prosper. It has been decreed in high heaven that sin must go down and righteousness must triumph. Do you believe in our final victory; if not, get out! Cross over to the other side. Better is an armed foe than a weak-kneed coward.

Presented to the Queen.

To be presented to the Queen of England is considered the highest honor which can be bestowed on a lady. Once this honor has been conferred, the sacred portals of "Society" are opened to the recipient, and she is entitled to the privilege of presentation of foreign courts. Those who desire to be presented to Her Majesty for the first time are required to arrange the matter with some lady who has already passed through the ceremony. The latter proceeds by communicating with the Lord Chamberlain, whose duty it is to arrange to make enquiries as to the character of the intending debutante—a very important point, as the Queen is exceedingly strict in this respect.

Extraordinary inquiries having been made, the lady to be presented receives a card admitting her to the Throne-Room on the day fixed for the ceremony. The dress to be worn requires a good deal of attention, the royal decree being that each lady shall appear in a certain uniform. This uniform consists of a dress out low at the neck, with short sleeves and a train three yards in length! With gloves also de rigueur, and each lady must wear a veil hanging down the back, surmounted by three white ostrich feathers. Bouquets have to be provided, not only for the lady herself, but also for the coachman and footman.

The Throne-Room is, of course, at Buckingham Palace. It is a spacious oblong room, at one end of which the Queen takes her place, surrounded by the members of her family, seated according to their order of precedence. Very often the Prime Minister is present, and there is always a small body of ambassadors and other distinguished attaches. Those about to be presented assemble in an ante-room, and as no order of precedence is observed here, there is considerable striving to be presented among the first, especially as Her Majesty often leaves the Princess of Wales to receive towards the end of the ceremony.

The way to the Throne-Room from the ante-chamber, is through a corridor, the entrance to which is guarded by the gentlemen-at-arms, in their plumed helmets and gorgeous uniforms of scarlet and gold. In side the corridor one of the gentlemen of the household adjusts the lady's veil and train, and then, with her bouquet and fan in her right hand, she is ready. A large mirror extends along one side of the room, in which she may see that all is correct. Her presentation card is handed by a page to the Lord Chamberlain, who calls out the lady's name and then drops the card into a gilded basket at his feet.

Entering the Throne-Room, the lady walks straight up to Her Majesty, making her courtesy, and extends her right hand. The Queen places her left hand over the extended hand of the lady, who again courtesies, and kisses the royal hand. The ceremony is now over—no, not quite, for it is the rule for ladies to make a series of courtesies as they move backwards out of the room, and with three yards of train sweeping the floor, this can hardly be the lightest part of the ideal. We should add that when young ladies of high order are presented, Her Majesty usually kisses them on the cheek, a mark of favor which is generally also extended to duchesses. After a lady has been presented she may have a seat in a gallery beyond the Throne-Room, where she can admire the dresses of those entering later than herself.

A royal presentation is rather a costly affair. The court etiquette in regard to dress is in many cases felt to be irksome and unpleasant, although it should be said that the Queen herself always appears in the same style of dress as that required to be worn by her subjects on presentation. It must be anything but pleasant, however, for a lady to have to sit in the ante-room perhaps for three hours on a cold, wet day, waiting her turn, in a low-cut dress with short sleeves. Modern ladies have over and over again condemned this ridiculous court uniform, but apparently to no purpose.

'All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy,' cordin' to my way o' thinkin', and blam'd if you shan't have a little o' that."

O. Bortle, of Manchester, Ontario, N. Y., writes: "I obtained immediate relief from the use of Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. I have had asthma for eleven years. Have been obliged to set up all night for ten or twelve nights in succession. I can now sleep soundly all night on a feather bed, which I had not been able to do previously to using the Oil."

Mrs. D. Morrison, Farmham Centre, P. Q., writing about Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, says: George Boland used it on his son, and it cured him of rheumatism with only a few applications. The balance of the bottle was used by an old gentleman for Asthma, with the best results. It acts like a charm."

SEARCHED AND FORWARDED TO THE QUEEN. A Gentle of the Foreign Court that made the Sea Water Red.

The other morning at five o'clock, says Arden (N. J.), correspondent of the Philadelphia Times, while the bath was being enjoyed in the morning, a large school of porpoises made a dash up the coast just behind the bathers. There were over a hundred of these slippery monsters, so hard to catch in a net, and they never bite any known bait. A good-sized porpoise will devour a bushel of moss-bunkers, or a young drum-fish at a single meal, and just now the surf is filled with small drum-fish feeding at flood tide. The man-eating shark likes the same kind of diet and many a bloody conflict ensues between these robbers of the deep when they meet on common feeding ground. In front of the hotel there is considerable depth of water, and the porpoises came so near that many of them could have been reached with a fishing rod.

Suddenly, as the school of porpoises were tumbling over each other in play, a four-foot shark made a dash out of the water, pursued by a ten-foot porpoise. The porpoise succeeded in biting a piece of the man-eater, and made a vicious plunge at the shark in mid-air, while the sea became red with blood. Both fish were in a duel to the death. Neither tried to escape. The shark was the swifter in motion, but was an unequal antagonist. The porpoise would dive under him and strike him in the belly under the water, to the great discomfort of the man-eater, whose jaws were not big enough to make much impression on the tough hide of the slippery scabbard. Three times they met in mid-air, and each struck each other as two bull elks butt each other with their antlers.

The porpoise slowly retired ten feet, and with the swiftness of lightning struck the shark in the middle and ripped him open. The man-eater soon floated, dead, out on the sea, while the porpoise, badly hurt, followed his companions up Townsend inlet.

A stinging sensation in throat and palate called heartburn, and oppression at the pit of the stomach after eating, are both the offspring of dyspepsia. Alkaline salts like carbonate of soda may relieve but cannot remove the cause. A lasting remedy is to be found in Northrop & Lpman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure. These associate organs, the liver and bowels, benefit in common with their ally, the stomach, by the use of this benign and blood-purifying remedy.

Death of the Widow of the late Joseph Howe.

The death is announced of Mrs. Howe, widow of Hon. Joseph Howe, at an advanced age. The deceased lady, who was a daughter of Captain John McNab (N. S. Fencibles), was born at Newfoundland in 1807, but a few years later removed with her parents to Nova Scotia and resided at McNab's Island until her marriage in 1823. For 45 years she was a faithful and devoted wife, taking a deep interest in her husband's plans and sharing his victories and defeats during a stormy political life. She was possessed of a vigorous mind and much good sense, and was greatly esteemed by her husband's associates as well as by a large circle of friends. Though confined to the house for the past few years she was interested in all that went on, and till within a few days of her death, could remember distinctly all the political and social changes of the last sixty or seventy years. She was the mother of a large family, of whom only three are now surviving. She received an annuity of $500, a year, from the local government.

Nothing so suddenly obstructs the perspiration of the skin as heat from heat in cold. Heat rarifies the blood, quickens the circulation and increases the perspiration, but when these are suddenly checked the consequences must be bad. The most common cause of disease is obstructed perspiration, or what commonly goes by the name of catching cold, coughs, colds, sore throat etc., if attended to in time are easily subdued, but if allowed to run their own course, generally prove the forerunner of more dangerous diseases. Nine-tenths of the con-sumptives date their affliction from a meg-lected cold, and the diseases that are caused by wet feet, damp clothes, or ex-posure are more numerous than are generally supposed. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs is Bickel's Anti-consumptive Syrup. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, which frees the lungs from viscid phlegm by changing the secretions from a diseased to a healthy state.

POETRY.

A SERMON IN RHYME.

If you have a friend worth loving,
Love him. Yes, and let him know That you love him as much as I do,
And his love will be a blessing,
Why should good words never be said
Of a friend—till he is dead?

If you have a song that thrills you,
Sing it by the side of me;
Praise him; do not let the singer
Waste his words on the air;
Why should one who thrills your heart
Lack the joy you may impart?

If you hear a prayer that moves you,
By its humble pleading tone,
Join it; do not let the seeker
Grieve before his God alone;
Why should not your brother share
The strength of "three or three" in prayer?

If a silver laugh goes rippling
Through the sunshine of his face, Share it; 'tis the wise man's saying—
For both grief and joy a place,
There's health and goodness in the mirth
In which an honest laugh has birth.

If your work is made more easy
By a friendly helping hand,
Say so; speak out brave and truly,
For the darkness veils the hand,
Share it; brother kindness dear
Falls for a word of cheer?

Scatter thus your seeds of kindness,
All enriching as you go—
Leave them; Trust the harvest Giver,
He will make each seed to grow.
So until his happy end,
Your life shall never lack a friend.

HAZARD.
(London World)

"Look here, dear boy, something has gone wrong, and you'd better make a clean breast of it. I don't suppose for an instant that you have come all this way for a few hours just for a look at the little horse, though, upon my word, I think he's worth it. You should have seen him showing the field the way the day we found in Otley wood and killed close to Greyton Church. What a run that was!
Tom Lawless, young Masterman and myself were the only ones to live to the end of it. Tom offered me then two hundred for Hazard, but I'd have refused to take the sum.
He's a fine hunter as ever man straddled—never knew him to make a mistake. I wouldn't part with him—but there, old fellow, enough of my pet weakness; you are only taking half an interest to-day.
What's up, Phil?"

"Nothing—that is—everything;
but I will hazard where did you first lay hands on Hazard?"

"You remember poor Jimmy Knowles?" Rare good chap he was. I was with him just before the end came, and among other things he asked me if I'd keep Hazard, who had then never had a bit in his mouth. "Come of the Merry Venture stock," says poor Jimmy; "I was looking forward to having the training of the young un. I'll be bound he'll never disgrace his parentage; you'd need to go far before you could beat old Jesse, and she's given him all her good looks." Then he made me promise to break him in myself, and from that day Hazard has never known another rider. Poor Jimmy!
he was about right in his calculations. Tell you what, Phil, I've never raced the little horse but I believe he could show nine out of ten in the whole shire a clean pair of heels. Merry Venture's son is bound to have speed."

"Have you entered him for anything at your races next week?"

"Only for the cup. I'd like to win that. He's in capital training."

"Stopford was chanting his praises last night," remarked Philip, glancing approvingly at his brother's favorite, and Stopford's no mean judge of a horse."

"By the way, have you and he been devoting your energies to each other lately?"

Philip frowned, and changed his position uneasily, without replying.

"Oh, that's it, is it? Never mind old chap; I expect we can square matters all right. Come to my quarters; we've seen enough of Hazard for this afternoon."

After all, it was not till seated over a blazing fire, with smoke clouds wreathing a kindly screen between him and his brother's searching gaze, that Philip Stansted found courage to own the truth.

"Fact is, I'm in the devil of a hole. It's all up with me this time, and I'll have to make a clean bolt for it. You've helped me to often enough before, and I'm worse than a fool to have come to a mash again. Well, I'm past help now; it's a case of chucking the service and making tracks for America or Kamschatka or some place where they'll never know anything about me."

"Nonsense!" said Kit; "I'll go bail your affairs are not past helping. What's the amount?"

"Near two thousand."

Kit's face fell. He was quite accustomed to Phil's difficulties, and it was perfectly true that at some cost to himself he had come to the rescue more than once. A spendthrift young brother, he thought, was on the whole not an altogether unmixed blessing. However, they were pretty well alone in the world, and would hold by each other. Kit scarcely confessed to himself his al-

HAZARD.

better. For looks, temper and breeding he wasn't his equal; but you know him—know what I think of him."

"Know him? Was there horse or rider in the whole county whom she had watched more closely as they dashed galloping in the first night?
Was there one who had been oftener at her side as they trotted homeward in the winter evening? Had she not listened to his praises and heard him utter words that, come what might, should own no other master?"

"It must be something very bad which has brought you to this decision. Just you tell him, Capt. Stansted?"

"I must indeed."

"He might have resented such questioning from other lips, but who could resent word or action of Majorie's? Not Kit, at any rate."

"The little winsome face fell, and the blue eyes filled. She guessed how sorely Kit must feel parting with his favorite. Perhaps she pictured to herself the farewell in the dark stable the night before.

"I am so sorry," she faltered.
"Don't for pity's sake, Lady Majorie, don't unnerve me now."

She was frightened at the pallor of his face.

"You are ill, you are not fit to ride to-day. Do give it up!"

"It's nothing. I've had a touch of the fever," replied Kit. "I must ride and must win, too. Wish me luck; it is time to saddle."

The pleasure of the day had vanished for Lady Marjorie. That Kit was in very great trouble was evident, and yet only ten days ago he was confiding to her hopes and plans, untiring by any fear of coming distress. Of course it was money. "Oh! why can't I give him mine?" thought the little heroic.

"Hullo, Majorie! In a brown study? Here's the great race just coming off. What's your fancy for it?"

Majorie looked up quickly.
"Where are they, Edmund? Where do they start from?"

"There; don't you see them by that post?" answered her brother.
"Stansted is just riding up. Can't think what induced him to enter Hazard at the last moment. Keen on selling him, too. I'll bet that brother of his is at the bottom of
it."

"Edmund, I want you to buy Hazard for me," interrupted Majorie.

"For you?" echoed Lord Silver-dale. "My dear child, do you know that Stansted wants Hazard to fetch over 1000 guineas?"

"A thousand—two thousand—what do I care?" cried Majorie passionately. "The money's there.
Come," she added, coaxingly, "you will do it for me, like a dear boy.
I want him so much."

Silverdale glanced curiously at her, and vague suspicions took definite form in his brotherly mind.

"All right, little girl; I don't suppose you could find a safer or showier mount. Come on; if we get to that mound we'll have a better view of the course, and they'll be off in a minute."

Kit knew most of the horses he had to deal with. Booby and Sly he dismissed with scarcely a thought. Masterman's Rocketeer was a long lean bay, who looked like mischief. Tom Lawless himself was riding Saturn, one of the heroes of the memorable Otley Wood run.
Tom greeted Stansted in his usual cheery manner.

"I must have a bid for the little horse. Hark ye, my friend, if I see that grey old veteran yonder?
Stands quiet, don't he? That's Kettledrum, and that's Nick Norris mounting him. Keep your eye on him, for he'll be in the van, bar-cendits, as you may name him." Robinson. There, too, stands the favorite, Milford. Wish you luck!

Who's this? One of your fellows, Stansted?"

With that Lawless trotted up to the post, and the newcomer reined in beside Kit.

"How's the fever? You look a bit washed out. Look here, you are not up to the mark, and it's a stiffish course; best give in. Hold up, Juggins! Is it anything I can do for you, Kit?"

"No thanks, Dolly. Hazard and I are both fit enough to fight for ourselves. It's sink or swim with us to-day, do you see?"

"Ay, with two thousand and a brother's reputation on the issue, but Dolly did not know name's not Robinson. There, too, stands the favorite, Milford. Wish you luck!

A dozen of them, all told, and as fair a start as man could wish.
Hazard showed well up to the fore as they swept gayly over the grass land and headed for the hollow.
Once into the plough, Kit took a pull at the young un, and let Rockeater and Sly slip past for the lead.

"Heavy going," said Silverdale.
"Last week's rain has done no end of mischief; the meadows yonder are half flooded. By Jupiter!
Hazard takes the cake for good looks."

"He is beautiful," whispered Majorie, with her eyes fastened on the glossy black coat, the little ears pricked, the scarlet nostrils distended.

In and out of the lane with something of a scramble, and Booby led behind; the favorite and Saturn abreast, Hazard at their quarters, Kettledrum taking it easy. Up to the hill; then a dash for the hurdles.
Dolly's horse pitched badly, staggered, fell out of the running; and Hazard, much-beattered, straining eagerly at his bit, rose to the next jump level with Saturn. It looked forbidding enough, but there was no time for choosing. They landed side by side in the meadow, but Sly came to grief, and made such a gap that Kettledrum and Milford, taking immediate advantage of it, shot forward, and for a few seconds the horses were scarcely distinguishable —straight for the water, with the sunlight flashing broadly on the stream.

Kit drew his breath hard. Hazard was going strong, but his master felt miserably conscious that his own strength was scarcely equal to the effort. What if he should fail?
The thump of the hoofs, the cries of the crowd, the rush through the cold air to Kit's strained nerves seemed mingling with Philip's words, "the devil's own work." Philip's face, haggard and worn, came between him and the stretch of water and between him and the blinding sunlight.

"Edmund," whispered Majorie,
"what has happened to Captain Stansted? Do look! is he going to faint?"

A heavy pull brought Hazard almost almost to a standstill. Only for a moment; the misdeed from Kit's sight in time to let him see that the field had swept suddenly to the left, heading up the bank. Kit grasped the position at once; a dam had given away, and the stream was swollen to undue proportions; even Lawless would not face it, and made for the bridge higher up. The momentary check had lost Hazard a place it was more than doubtful if he could regain.

"Now or never! Life or death, Hazard!" muttered Kit.

"By the Lord Harry, Majorie! he's going for the water!" Silverdale's voice shook. It looked like certain death.

The crowd surged tumultuously, uttering shouts of warning; but as Kit neared the glittering stream, it held them spellbound. Kit's eyes gleamed strangely; he raised the whip once, but Hazard needed no spur. Mad at having been held back from the rest, his mettle was thoroughly roused. He shortened his stride ever so little. Like sire, like son. Had Merry Venture ever shirked? He rose like a bird, skimmed through the air. A thundering shout went up from the spectators.
"Thank God!" murmured Majorie, losing her clasped hands, and Hazard forged ahead exultantly.

"They met at the rails—Hazard leading—Rocketeer's beat—the little horse wins—no, Milford comes up.
Milford! Milford!" The cries grow louder and louder. Kit heard Saturn's labored breathing, heard Lawless mutter, "Ware the veteran!"

They turned into the straight-spur and whip, whip and spur, and Kettledrum creeping up. The tension greater with every stride, Kit's brain reeled. What if he were to fail? What then? What then?

Digby Weekly Courier.

Digby, N. S., August 8th, 1890.

THE TROUBLE WITH THE GRANADIERS.

Some facts in connection with army discipline in general, and that of the guards in particular, have been brought out by the recent "discovery" of the second battalion of the Grenadier guards. The guards have always been the Queen's household troops, and when it was brought to her notice by the Prince of Wales, that the second battalion was to be disbanded, and some of them were to be imprisoned, her majesty took immediate steps to find out the cause of such a serious occurrence. The first result of her enquiries was, that the guards who had been sent to Bermuda in a troop ship, were at once recalled, and the whole contingent submitted to a thorough investigation. It is said that her majesty only gets her royal back up once in a while, but when she does, she is determined to have her own way. In this instance, there are sufficient grounds for her interference, as we can place any reliance on the grievances which the soldiers state on the subject of their treatment. A newspaper correspondent gives the following description of some of the scenes and incidents connected with their departure from London, when it was not supposed that the order for their recall would follow so closely upon the order for their departure: "The scenes connected with the recall of the second battalion of the Grenadiers, were both interesting and at times touching. The men were paraded at daybreak, and were marched along the parade ground to the Victoria station. Early as was the hour the streets were crowded, and at least 20,000 people accompanied them, the men cheering and the women and children sobbing and crying. The arrival of the Grenadiers at the Victoria station, was a scene which tended to cast a gloom over the whole battalion. When sentences were pronounced at the parade, some painful scenes occurred. The oldest soldiers of the companies seem to have been selected for trial, by a strange misfortune a veteran named Perren was one of the unhappy prisoners. An older man named Rigs, belonging to the same company, had been transferred to the reserve the day before. Later in the day the prisoners exchanged their regimental for their prison garb. The precise hour of their removal to the British military prison was a well-guarded secret, while their transfer to the military prison was a quiet affair, and the soldiers were taken to the prison by a private road. When the men emerged the spectators raised a loud shout. They were handcuffed in pairs and escorted by non-commissioned officers. They appeared sad and lonely, and the soldiers of the regiment shouted, "Get your hearts content." Several prisoners burst out crying after the departure of the men. The story of their farewell parting with their wives and children, and the scenes which took place in the streets, was a sad one. The women, children, sweethearts and kindred crowded into the spectators' yard. Painful meetings took place in the yard and in the streets. Outside stood a great crowd of sightseers, who gazed curiously and sympathetically at the soldiers. The companies were separated, the women hurrying away with their friends, and children taking a farewell kiss from their father. While these pathetic scenes were going on in the yard, different ones were being enacted in the streets. Young women who seemed to have lost all money were there treating their lovers. The taps were continually running, and the flowing blood apparently lightened the burden of the men for the time. They forgot their misfortune and indulged in jig-dancing and singing. At the sound of the bugle women rushed outside. At 5 o'clock the men were drawn up in double line, and in a few minutes later the colonel gave the order to march. The great gates of the Buckingham palace end of the yard were thrown open, and while the band played, the spirit-sustaining British Grenadiers, the London marched out and were greeted by the shouts and cheers of an enormous throng. A number of policemen were formed in three lines to open the way for the soldiers. After the police came sappers and miners, and behind them the Grenadiers, with the head of the regiment. As the battalion appeared in the road a mighty deafening cheer went up from the assembled thousands. The column was repeatedly broken, caused by women seeking their husbands, and when, when found, they rushed into the ranks. Several men kept pace with their sons. It is said that at the inspection by the Duke of Cambridge it was noticed that the men shouldered their arms in a slovenly manner, there appearing to be no instruction on their part not to obey orders. Subsequent inquiries have elicited the fact that an understanding existed that on the order to shoulder arms being given, they should remain motionless. Fortunately the men altered their minds at the last moment on seeing that some of their comrades were obeying orders. A reporter interviewed a soldier of the Grenadiers, who says that his comrades are entirely in sympathy with the men of the second battalion, and that there will certainly be trouble unless certain reforms are made.

A MATRIMONIAL BONANZA.

A gentleman of this town received the following letter from what appears to be a sort of matrimonial agency in New York. The receiver being already provided with a partner for life, sends us his enclosure which we publish for the benefit of any one desirous of entering the matrimonial state under the auspices of the New York City. There are in this world many queer ways of making a living, and this is certainly one of them: "DEAR SIR, We have a large number of ladies under fifty-five possessing property from $10,000 to $50,000. Should you comply with our terms, we will forward an introductory letter, from you, to as many of these ladies as you may desire. All of them have signed an agreement to reply to every letter sent them. This is all we can promise you; we cannot promise to furnish you a wife, and if we did you would think we were promising something we could not carry out. "Very respectfully, "H. B. WELLMAN, per R."

SHIPWRECK AND MUTINY.

THRILLING STORY OF THE LOSS OF THE ONCEIDA.

Travelling Over a Week-end of Time—Several Mutineers Killed and the Others Surrendered.

New York, July 29.—News was received to-day of the loss of the British ship Onceida, bound from Melbourne for London, and the loss of the American bark Lone Star. Capt. Crossley of the Onceida, and the Lone Star came into collision 200 miles south of Ceylon. The bark was sunk, but the crew of 18 men was saved by the Onceida, which had her cutter completely broken off, and was rapidly filling. All hands went to the pumps, and the helpless ship swung into one of the ocean streams and eventually grounded on a lee shore. The little strip of land was marked on the chart as Cayo Island, but there was not a living thing on the island, which was only a few feet above the level of the sea. The crews decided to take ashore all the provisions, and stripped the ship of everything portable. They fixed up boats from the cargo of valuable lumber. There was plenty of food, for the vessel carried a large cargo of packed and dressed provision. The men demanded that one of the hogheads of rum which had been rescued should be heaved. Capt. Crossley and Goldard broke in one of the heads of the barrel and let the liquor run into the water. The men, finding that they had been outwitted, advanced in a threatening manner on the two skippers, but the carpenters, four mates and the boat-swains sided with the captains. At length, after 14 days, the officers decided to call upon the men of both crews respectively. Things went from bad to worse, until the 20th of March, when the mutineers, who had built a special camp of their own, swooned down on their shipmates and tried to overpower them. They were beaten back, and in the battle which ensued, several of the mutineers were killed, and the others surrendered. The shipwrecked sailors were eventually taken off the island by the British frigate Curlew.

A FAMOUS ENGLISH REGIMENT.

Sketch of the Grenadier Guards Which Recently Mutinied.

The Mutiny which arose in the ranks of the famous English regiment, the Grenadier Guards, is fraught with especial interest to us Bostonians, says the Harvard, from the fact that it was the band of that regiment which, under the leadership of Dan Godfrey, represented the musical element of Great Britain at the second peace jubilee given by P. S. Gilmore. The regiment has a proud history. The blood of its members enriched the battlefields of Blenheim, Ramillies, Oudenarde, Malplaquet, Dittingen, Cornaro, Barossa, the Peninsula, Waterloo, Alma, Inkermann, Sebastopol, Tel-el-Kebir and Suakin. It took part in the victories of the two most notable British warriors, John Churchill, the Duke of Marlborough, and Arthur Wellesley, the Duke of Wellington. It is the first of the three infantry regiments which constitute what is known as the "foot guards," the others being the Coldstream Guards and the Scots Guards.

The history of the Grenadier Guards dates back to the time of Charles II. On the 23rd of November, 1660, Col. John Russell was commissioned by the merry monarch to raise a regiment of loyal guards, which was to consist of 1200 companies of 100 men each. At this time, he said, the King had another regiment of royal guards in commission which had been raised under the following circumstances: In 1653 Cromwell needed an alliance with the French King, Louis XIV., against Spain. Charles and his brother James, who were then living in France, on the consummation of the alliance, quitted the French court, and returning to Brussels joined the Spaniards in the Netherlands in opposition to the protector and French King. From the great body of loyal English and Irish who accompanied them, Charles raised six regiments for the Spanish service, the first of the regiment being known as "the Royal regiments of Guards." Charles, exchequer running somewhat dry, laid this regiment, which as a consequence was disbanded. After the restoration this regiment was re-established, and sent to garrison Dunkirk, then in possession of England.

Meantime Col. Russell had raised his corps, which he called the King's regiment of guards, and when, in 1662, Dunkirk was sold to the French, the regiment then in garrison at that place was withdrawn and added to Col. Russell's corps and became the first regiment of foot guards. The officers of the companies were distinguished for their corsets, the captain wearing double gilt, the lieutenants polished double gilt, and the ensigns silver plate. The uniform was scarlet coats with blue breeches and stockings and plumed hats. On the 3rd of April, 1678, a grenadier company was added to the regiment.

For the first 70 years of its existence the regiment made its presence known in many a "glorious and well fought field," and was not only a terror to the Moors in Tangier, but to the Indians in Virginia under the leadership of Braddock, and, no doubt, many a message had been transmitted to its commanding officer by our own Washington. In the course of time some one or other part of the regiment performed the duty of marines on board the fleet, and took part in the naval engagement with the Dutch at Solebay, of which Admiral De Ruyter said that "of the 32 sea fights he had been in it was the hardest fought." The regiment also fought at Sedgemoor, and, under the leadership of William of Orange, it took part in the campaign in Flanders, fighting at Steenkerke, Landen and the siege of Namur, and beyond question swarming as terribly as any of the other troops in the campaign.

THE ARIZONA KICKER.

Western Enterprise Continues to Lead.

We extract the following from the last issue of the Arizona Kicker: A QUEER PROCEEDING.—The other night some of the boys came around and routed us out of bed at midnight to see a show. Pete is the chap who killed Col. Williams in a saloon just last fall, and who has had a shot at several other eminent citizens including ourselves. For the last two weeks he has been running the town and his refusal to take a hint resulted in his being waited on by his vigilance committee. We reached the grounds to find Pete standing on a barrel with a rope around his neck. He knew his time had come, but no sooner did he learn of our presence in the crowd than he began to protest and object and demand that we be run into the scrub. We called his attention to the fact that he had had two shots at us at close range, and that we were the only party on the ground who would shoot him on the spot. He kicked, but the ungrateful rough kept on kicking and would not even argue the case. A man in no matter how big a bluffer he is, and when it was seen how unreasonable Pete was, the boys went ahead with the banging just the same, and Mr. Smith went sail around our streets with a gun on each hip for many moons to come. We've seen some queer things out here, but the idea of a man like Pete Smith objecting to a man like us seeing him drop off a barrel rather caps the climax. We are charitable enough to believe that he was a little off.

A CANARD.—The story in certain Chicago papers that the editor of the Kicker runs a fur room in connection with the newspaper, bears the ear marks of our jealous pated contemporary. There isn't a word of truth in it.

It was suggested by Col. Kane, about month ago, that we give up a portion of our office space during the evening to a poker club of which we are president, and we cheerfully adopted the suggestion, and a game is on every night, from 7 to 11, but poker isn't faro—not by a long shot. Our enemies will gain nothing by circulating such absurd stories about our character.

DRAWING THE LINE.—Maj. Atwood, of Tombstone, came down the other day to ask a great favor of us. He wanted us to give him one of the bodies out of our private graveyard as a starter in establishing one of his own. While the major has been our friend from first to last, and while he always had a dollar for us in the old days when we were hard up, we must draw the line somewhere. We can have our shirt, our rabbit foot, our dog's bone, or our fine comb, but friendship ceases when he approaches the graveyard which we have been at so much pains and expense to fit up and make a feature of this section of the country.

A Bear Story.

A Vancouver correspondent has been describing a thrilling adventure to an exchange. He says that Roderick McDonald, who lives in one of the remote parts of a settlement at Molus River, a provincial town, was absent from home a few nights ago, having left his wife and sister as the sole defenders of his household. Just at dusk the two women, who were busy about their household, were suddenly attracted by a bellowing among the cattle in the barnyard. Without the slightest hesitation the women armed themselves with the only weapons at hand—an axe and a pitchfork—and sallied forth. Only a few steps had been traversed before they saw an enormous black bear that stood aggressively awaiting them. At either side of him lay an ox, which had fallen under his heavy blows, while the rest of the cattle were huddled closely in one corner of the yard bellowing piteously in their fright.

Mrs. McDonald, excited at the sight of the dead animals, rushed at the bear with a pitchfork, thrusting it deep into his neck. A roar of mingled rage and pain followed, and with a sweep of his paw, he swept the woman from her hands. The other woman struck at the bear with the axe, disabling one of his forward legs. Mrs. McDonald ran for her pitchfork in front, while her companion did deadily execution with the axe. The battle was short and sharp, and the bear was dead in a few moments. He was very large and old. The women had their clothes badly torn, but beyond a few scratches and the fright, suffered no injury.

THE TOWN OF DIGBY.

Cow-boy life has in the last few years lost much of its romance.

The cattle-brans have disengaged most of the men that drink, and have thrown so persistently upon gambling that little of it is done. Cards and whiskey being put away, there is small temptation to disorderly conduct; so it is only when they reach some large city, and are not on duty, that they indulge in a genuine spree. On the ranches kept under fence, they have little to do when not on a drive or in branding time, the cattle being all safely enclosed. But they must take their turns at line riding, which means a close inspection of the fences, and the repair of all breaks and damages. When night overtakes them they sleep, staking their horses, and rolling themselves in the blankets. These rides of inspection take days to accomplish, for there are ranches in Texas which extend in a straight line over seven-five miles. These ranches which are not kept under fence necessitate more work. The boys must then keep their cattle in sight, and while allowing them to graze in every direction, must see that none in the many thousands stray beyond the limits of their own particular pastures. They go then in parties, scattering over the territory, for they must cover hundreds of thousands of acres in a day.

It is not a life of hardship, and pays well enough. Everything is furnished to them free and of the very best, and they are paid besides. Each thirty dollars per month. Each cowboy stays out two to three weeks at a time; but they take with them the finest of camp wagons, with beds and bedding, cooking utensils, the best of groceries of all kinds, and as excellent a cook as money can employ. The prairies are full of game, and their rifles are ever handy. The life is free, fascinating, and peculiarly healthy.

These men are exceedingly chivalrous to all women; this seems to be a trait born in them, as much a part of their moral nature as it is of their physical to have small feet, for it is seldom that a genuine Texas cowboy can be found who has not the distinguishing mark of a handsome foot, and his boots are to him all that the sombrero is to a Mexican. He will deny himself many pleasures, he will go without a coat, and be seen in state deplorable attire, but his boots must be of the best and most beautiful make that the country can afford; high of heel and curved of instep, a fine upper and thin sole, fitting like a glove and showing the handsome foot to perfection.

Take the cow boys as a class, they are bold, fearless and generous, a warm-hearted and manly set, with nothing small, vicious, nor mean about them, and Texas need not be ashamed of the brave and skillful riders who traverse the length and breadth of her expansive prairies.

Disillusioned.

Our illusions have been dropping away from us, one by one, for over so many years. From the time when we began to grow suspicious of Santa Claus and his reindeer, and of the doctor as a distributor of babies hither and yon as fancy might strike him, the pleasant beliefs of our younger days, one after another, have been ruthlessly shattered. Just now there is tribulation among our 60,000,000 neighbors across the border for it has been discovered that all their fourth of July eloquence and all their expenditures for firecrackers and Chinese lanterns have been but a measure wasted. Some Granddaddy has come forward and proposed to prove that the declaration of independence was not signed on the fourth of July by more than one or two of those whose names are appended to that famous document, that many of them held off for months, in the language of the irreverent, to learn how the cat would jump, before committing themselves irrevocably to a cause that might end in disaster. The shock is a terrible one: the assertion that Washington paid a young man $3.50 in continental money, supplemented with a pair of half-worn gators, for writing his farewell address, was but like the buzzing of a mosquito in comparison. The world is full of myths: we walk among the shadows of slanders. We never hear of a Homer, a William Tell or an Orestes, who know anything about William Wallace or Robert Bruce? Who can prove that Shakespeare wasn't Bacon or that Bacon wasn't Shakespeare? After a time it may be shown that the declaration of independence is a forgery, that its signers never had an existence any more than the heroes that have been created by Dickens and Bulwer and Thackeray, who are hardly less real in our minds than the lesser heroes that we sometimes encounter, hailed with flesh and blood. Years hence the stranger visiting here may inquire, who were the Loyalists and where were they buried? And he may be answered, "They were said to have been the founders of the city and it used to be said they were buried near the Golden Ball corner. For a time the place was enclosed and the gates were kept locked at night that it might be secure from profanation. Later the enclosure was removed, the ground was utilized in various ways, and if such men and women ever existed in reality, no one can point with any degree of certainty to their place of burial."—Gazette.

A CHILD SAID.—My little boy was taken very bad with diarrhoea, he was very delicate and got so low we had no hope of his life, but a lady friend recommended Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and although he could only bear a few drops at a time he got well. It saved my child.

RUSSIAN PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS.

Civilized Europe is shocked at the receipt of the full details of the Russian persecution of the Jews. The Russian edicts are of the most cruel character. The first edict says: "No Jew is any longer permitted to own or lease farm lands." All Jewish land owners, farmers and agricultural laborers are thus expelled from their village homes. Unless they have saved means enough for their sustenance they will be reduced to beggary. To intensify the severity of this edict the government have included hundreds of small towns in the category of country villages, and have expelled Jews from them by tens of thousands who will thus be rendered homeless. These laws, known as the May laws, were promulgated in 1882, but never enforced until now. The second edict provides that all Jews, numbering many thousands and families, settled outside the sixteen specified counties shall be expelled. An equally large number of old-fashioned Jews will be rendered homeless by the enforcement. The third edict withdraws permission for them to reside outside these sixteen counties. All Jews are prevented by the fourth edict from holding shares or connecting themselves in any way with the mining industry, and the fifth still further restricts their participation in the educational advantages. The Jewish schools in the past were not allowed to exceed 5 per cent. among the students at the universities, and this proportion is now further reduced, the result being their wholesale expulsion from the higher institutions.

The sixth edict impresses upon the Jewish students another disability by closing the legal profession against them, while the seventh edict excludes them from engineering, naval and medical professions and from all government offices.

The cruel part of these prohibitions is that an enormous proportion of the Jewish population are skilled agriculturists, artisans, and professional men, who are all adding largely to the wealth of the empire. All these will now be ruined. It is estimated that nearly a million people will be expelled from their homes under these most tyrannical and reactionary laws.

The consequent migration causes a congestion among the starving fugitives in the cities where the Jews are still allowed to dwell, and may possibly result in pestilence. But only one object can be contemplated by the instigators of the persecution—namely, the total extermination of the four million Jews in Russia.

The troubles which afflicted the Jews in Russia seven years ago arose from breaches of the law. A certain number of perpetrators were brought to justice and punished. In the present case the government legalizes persecution. The Jews have always been subject to exceptional laws, which, however, did not render their living impossible.

They in fact increased in numbers, wealth and intelligence; were industrious, thrifty, law-abiding, and sober, and were successful as merchants, traders, artisans and agriculturists. A few were permitted to enter universities and later became distinguished as lawyers, physicians and men of science. All this is now changed. Such persecution involves a refinement of cruelty for which history furnishes no parallel. It is rumored that the victims of this Russian oppression will, as in 1882, break through the cordon on the Austrian and Prussian frontiers, and find an asylum in free England, to the injury of the overstocked labor market.

It has been suggested that the Canadian government offer free grants to the North West to some of these persecuted people, claiming that if the land is given to them their co-religionists in England and other parts of the world will guarantee them a sufficient supply of money to last till their first crops come to maturity. The Jews are a law-abiding people; they are thrifty and industrious and make good citizens. The suggestion, therefore, is worthy of consideration.

A NEW ARMY HYMN.

The Halifax Recorder says: "The Salvation Army has adapted the tune of 'Little Annie Rooney' to the work of the salvation of sinners. The familiar words of 'She's my sweetheart, I'm her love; She's my Annie, I'm her Joe, have been translated for the purposes of the army to read: 'He's my Jesus, He's my Lord; He's my Saviour, He's my God. Some people may have an idea that this is a bit sacrilegious, but the army believes in 'anything to save sinners,' and so 'everything goes.' Yes, everything goes, and frequently very much to the disgust of those whose reverence for sacred things is severely shocked by what is little short of profanity. There are many commendable things connected with the Salvation Army and they have done much good in the past in Digby for which they deserve great praise, but we have never been able to reconcile ourselves to the reckless and irreverent manner in which they treat the most sacred verities of the Christian faith. The names of the Deity and of our blessed Saviour are used with as little reverence as these of our acquaintance. While the end they have in view may be most commendable, some of the means used for obtaining it are most objectionable.

In his latest work calling his experiences 'In Darkest Africa,' Stanley says: 'The more experience and insight I obtain into human nature the more convinced do I become that the greater portion of a man is purely animal. Fully and regularly fed he is a being capable of being excited or coerced to exertion of any kind, love and fear away him easily, he is not averse to labor, however severe; but when starved it is well to keep in mind the motto 'Cave Canem,' for a starving lion over a morsel of beef is not so ferocious or so ready to take offense. Rigid discipline, daily burdens and endless marching into regions of which they were perfectly ignorant never seemed to gull our men much when they were pampered and abundant provender for their digestive organs was provided; but even hanging unto death was only a temporary damper to their inclination to excessive mischief when pinched with hunger.'

Riddled with Bullets.

Temple, Tex., Aug. 11.—Pick Wiseman, a gambler who waylaid and shot deputy city marshal Hawks, was acquitted several days ago on testimony given by his mistress, Cora McMahon, has been threatening to kill some of the citizens who took an interest in endeavoring to bring him to justice. Wiseman and the woman went out riding on Saturday and yesterday morning both were found dead on a country road with fatal bullet wounds.

Home and Abroad.

President Harrison has been visiting Boston.

St. John and Lady MacDonald have been visiting Prince Edward Island.

Large quantities of mackerel, which are gradually getting fatter, are schooling in St. Mary's Bay.

BASE BALL.—The Cornwallis bulletin board now contains the results of games in the N.B. League.

The Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of the maritime provinces is holding its annual meeting at St. John.

Cardinal Newman, one of the most eminent ecclesiastical statesmen, died in London on Monday, aged 89 years.

A Frenchman, working on the railway near Victoria bridge, was severely injured by a fall of earth on Monday.

We have received from the department of marine a list of all Canadian shipping on the registry books of the Dominion.

A number of our citizens left on Tuesday for Halifax, to attend the meeting of the High Court of Foresters, at that place.

Digby is crowded with summer visitors from the States and St. John. Tourist travel was better in the history of the town.

Don't fail to be present at the literary entertainment at the Baptist Hall this evening. Readings by Miss Ray should be well patronized.

The "Great London staff of 40 eminent physicians" have decided to withdraw from Nova Scotia. The Provincial Medical Board pushed them too hard.

Lieutenant W. J. Stairs, who was Stanley's right-hand man in his expedition for the rescue of Emin Pasha, arrived at Halifax Sunday on two months' leave of absence to visit his mother.

The Baptist Sunday School picnic which was held at Clementsport, on Wednesday, was attended by nearly two hundred persons. A very pleasant time was spent, and the school was well pleased with their visit to this pretty little village.

Four "king" mackerel got caught in a weir at Mink Cove, yesterday, owned by Mr. Samuel Gidney, and created quite an excitement among the wet tenders before they were killed. They averaged about 8 feet in length, and the combined weight was over a ton.

The Presbyterian and Methodist Sunday Schools of Annapolis had an excursion to Digby yesterday. They were conveyed to the wharf by the Annapolis, and although the weather was not just what we should like it to have been, we trust their visit was an enjoyable one.

Nothing has yet been heard of Mr. Sypher, who disappeared so mysteriously on Monday evening over the weekend ago. Searching parties have gone through the neighboring woods in every direction but without success. It is strange that a man could thus drop out of all knowledge of his fellow men suddenly, without leaving a trace behind him.

We are requested to state that the single men of the town wish to arrange a game of "base ball" with the married men, to be played on the cricket grounds next Wednesday afternoon. They are anxious to have a contest, proving that marriage is a failure—in the way of base ball players—and think they can literally "wipe the earth" with the benefits.

The gathering of the Acadia French at Church Point has not been attended by as favorable weather as we could have wished for such an interesting occasion. On Tuesday about 50 gentlemen and ladies arrived by the Monticello, and proceeded by the afternoon train for Clare. Among them were Hon. Judge Landry, Hon. O. J. LeBlanc, Hon. A. D. Richard, Hon. Senator Poirer, Hon. J. V. Arsenault, Rev. A. D. Cormier and Rev. Ph. Belliveau.

A couple who arrived here on Wednesday to have the nuptial knot tied by one of our Digby clergymen were obliged to return home in the same state of celibacy as when they arrived. It happened, unfortunately, that one of their clergymen, not one was on hand at that time. This will never do. When two hearts that beat as one wish to be united, some one must be on hand to do the work. We can't afford to have our clergymen go elsewhere. Business is business and must be attended to.

The St. John Sun of Thursday says: "The lively scene around the New York steamship company's wharf yesterday would lead to the belief that the steamer Weymouth was about to do a big business. After discharging a large number of barrels of mackerel for shipment to New York by the Valencia she took on board a quantity of freight for Weymouth and other Nova Scotia ports. She sailed at 1 o'clock in the afternoon with a large passenger list, seventy of whom were bound for Church Point to attend the Acadia convention."

On Tuesday evening of last week August 10, the high court of Nova Scotia, presided by Mr. J. LeBlanc, aged 80, of Little Brook, Clare, left his house about 6.30 to get his cows, about three quarters of a mile distant, and falling to rest before dark an alarm was given, and with the women, with lanterns, started for a search. At three o'clock the following morning his body was found in a field on the adjacent farm. He was lying with his cane in his hand and his hat on his head, and probably died without a struggle. He was highly respected in the community, and leaves a widow, two sons and four daughters.

The Windsor & Annapolis Railway has issued a beautiful little pocket card time table. The first page is a combination picture in gold and colors, illustrative of Nova Scotia scenery, with a W. & A. R. train and a vignette of Evangeline. The two inside pages are given up to a time table and other information, and the fourth page has a map of Western Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and New England, showing the line of the railway, showing part of the Basin of Minas. The folder also contains a map, time table, fares and a quantity of information in a condensed form. On the back are miniature views of Halifax, St. John, and Blomidon. We are glad to see this truly picturesque line of railway being more generally made known to the pleasure-seeking public.

LITTLE RIVER NOTES.

(From a Correspondent.)

A few Little River notes may interest some of your readers.

Our merchants appear to be busy. Mr. P. W. Frost has opened up a large assortment of goods in his new store at the corner, and has removed the post office to it, which was a move in the right direction. The large quantity of fish which have been shipped from his premises, show that the fishermen have been having a fair catch.

Wm. Lunt, Esq., is located in a well fitted store opposite, and we judge is doing a good business.

A sidewalk is talked of here, it is much needed and much ready for a few days now, and as we usually have for several months in the year would insure success in the matter.

The Thistle Hadding Canning Co. have done more business than usual this season, and a number of hands employed in the business. We trust this enterprise will prove a success. We noticed a few visitors at this establishment last week, viz. Mr. T. P. Tippet, of the first class, and Mr. C. D. St. John, general agents for the Co. Mr. St. John, Peterson from New York, and Mrs. Robt. Austin, wife of the manager and principal proprietor of this business.

Among our visitors to this village, are: Mr. and Mrs. Poole, of Foxboro, Mass.; Mr. Sanford Carty, Mrs. Isaac Saunders, and Mr. Reed, from Boston; Miss Maggie Harris and brother, from Annapolis; Dr. Morison and Mr. Leitch, from Weymouth. Mr. Naylor from Halifax is here, and judging from his smiling countenance, is expecting a pleasant time.

Mr. Mudge has been here with his magic lantern show. It is as good as we could expect from Johnny.

What about connection with Matilda telephone line at Digby? This would better accommodate the public and enlarge the receipts of the Co. It may not be, since private individuals have offered to pay the expense of the change.

Our harbor presents a lively appearance since the modern have struck in the bay. We judge about 500 hula, have been taken on this side of the bay, in traps and seines, principally small to medium size, and some linkers; with good seines fishermen could get large hauls.

Capt. Thurler, from Freeport, Capt. Manning Trask and H. P. Small of this place, are leading here with dry fish.

Dog fish have taken possession of the sea water in the Bay of Fundy for the last three weeks, and since then our fishermen have been catching skeletons of lake and haddock, which are very plentiful on the bottom.

We saw Mr. E. E. Tupper, our new M. P., pass here yesterday, and hope he will not forget our new road opened up last winter.

BARTON NOTES.

The high court of the independent order of foresters in the province were represented. High Chief Ranger Henry Lovett, of Court Evangeline, Kentville, presided.

THE INQUISITIVE KAISER.

At Portsmouth, B. C., August 14th.

At Portsmouth, B. C., August 14th, the Emperor William displayed most intense interest in everything he saw in Portsmouth. He inspected the whole of the barracks, beginning with the men's quarters, every part of which he visited, and went through several of the buildings. In the main house he noted the quantity of water consumed daily and the manner in which it is distributed, putting all the time the most practical questions about the water supply. He was particularly interested in the information he received. Then his majesty proceeded to the canteen, where many peals of laughter, his order was commanded to taste the quality of the beer being served. The Emperor's report being favorable there was an immediate run on the beverage, while some tasted beer that had been two years in the barracks, which particular beer the Emperor enjoyed very much. After some time spent in the handsome room adjoining the admirably organized canteen, the Emperor went to the little theatre on the other side of the square. From thence he moved to the grocery store and spent some time in going behind the counter, making enquiries as to the price of various sorts of provisions and the profit made on them. Thence he went to the kitchen and examined the ranges in the cook house; then to the storehouse, where with his little library and his billiard tables, which excited the Emperor's warmest admiration.

THE MISSION DRIFTED.

A Patient Loses His Life in Eastern Province, Cape Colony, and is Buried in a Watery Grave.

(Vancouver World.)

Information has reached us that on Monday evening a sad case of drowning happened at the mission. It seems that a number of boys, pupils of the Brothers' school, were bathing in the river opposite the college. Near the spot where they were bathing a couple of deep draughts from the river, carrying by its eddy a powerful eddy. One of the boys by some means was caught in this eddy and was in great danger of drowning. Rev. Bro. Collins sprang in and tried to save the lad, but found that he could not do so. The current and the whirlpool were so strong that the boy's utmost efforts could not get him free. Several of the boys' companions also made unsuccessful attempts to reach their drowning comrade. At last Brother Wall arrived on the scene and, saying, "I'm going to go in and get him," plunged into the river and by powerful efforts rescued the new almost drowned lad. The brother placed the boy on his shoulders and supported him there on the surface of the water. A boat which had been launched a few minutes before had dashed to the shore, and the boy's springing safety into the strong hands stretched to reach him, sank his gallant preserver beneath the swift current, from whose depths he never reappeared. The boy's escape was narrow, as he was dragged out of the water by the hair of the head, and it was undoubtedly his leap out of the water and from the back of Brother Wall that saved that heroic man exhausted by his struggles and immersion, to his death.

Search was at once begun by Brother Corrie for the body of the drowned father, many of the Indians taking part in the work; but no news of its recovery has been received.

The deceased brother was a German by birth, and was only 34 years of age. He had devoted his life to the Indian mission service, and was for several years a teacher in the mission college, and belonged to the Order of Oblates of Mary Immaculate. His many good qualities of heart and mind, and his earnest and self-sacrificing spirit, respected by all with whom he was brought in contact, and his untimely end is widely deplored. He died for another, thus in his own way exemplifying the life and death of the great Master whom he served so faithfully.

THREE VICTIMS IN THEIR PAGES.

Jealousy Prompts an Egrotic and Horrible Crime at Waterbury, Conn.

Waterbury, Conn., August 9.—A mysterious case of vitrol throwing, with horrible results, and with jealousy as the probable motive, and as the cause of the tragedy, has been the subject of the local authorities to-day. Miss Rosa Vigeant, of No. 155 South Main Street, was awakened at an early hour on Thursday morning by a terrible burning sensation on her face and body. The girl was in great agony, and called loudly for help. Her parents hastened to her side and were horrified on discovering that she had been sprinkled with vitrol or some other caustic liquid. The girl was taken to the police to-day, but no arrests have yet been made. The case is shrouded in considerable mystery. It is evident that some one must have entered the girl's room while she was asleep, and thrown the vitrol over her, and then hastily got away, as the girl saw no one when she was awakened. Miss Vigeant is a very pretty girl of twenty-two years, and is the daughter of French-Canadian parents. Her father is employed by the City Ice company. The house where she lives is occupied by six families and accommodated a number of rooms. The window of the girl's room was left open last night, and it looks out on an addition which is as high as the sill. It is supposed that the vitrol thrower climbed up to the roof and then into the room. The girl believes that the vitrol was thrown by some one in the house who was acquainted with its arrangements. The wounds, while not immediately dangerous, are very painful, and the girl and her body will be disfigured for some time. Her father and sister, who slept with her, was also badly burned.

THE REVOLVER IN ENGLAND.

Does as Good Work as 12 in Texas—A Terrific Fight.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—A shocking triple murder occurred at Kingsland, in this city, on Wednesday night, which all London papers characterize yesterday as "an American tragedy." A devoted soldier and fireman, Alvin Karpis, quarrelled with William Lambert and John Wheeler while sitting together in a bar-room. The landlord elected them to draw a revolver and each man thrust the head. They fell dead on the sidewalk. The bystanders attempted to capture the murderer, who immediately shot again, killing a third man. An enormous and excited crowd then gathered around the scene, and kept everyone at bay leveling his revolver and backing down the street. No one had the courage to make an attempt to capture the murderer, and another man, grappled with him from behind. Then began a desperate fight for life. Karpis managed to fire his revolver three times into the crowd without hitting Karpis, a brother of the victim. The fight lasted a quarter of an hour, during which time Karpis was nearly killed, and Hargan nearly torn to pieces. His clothes were stripped from him, and when finally exhausted he was being led to the sidewalk, the crowd stamped on him, and would have lynched him but for the arrival of the police. He was picked up in a dying condition and carried to the station house on a stretcher. Hargan was taken to the West Surrey regiment three months ago, and went to New York in search of employment. He was not successful in finding it, and returned here a few days ago. It seems that the dead man robbed him the night before, and at the station house in giving his deposition, he said he had served them only as they would have been served in America for a similar offence. Hargan was a clerk in New York, and is now in Philadelphia. His full name is Walter Alfred Hargan, and he is evidently a man of some refinement and education.

A Check to the C. P. R.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Secretary Windom has decided that the bonded car system has been used by the Canadian Pacific Railway and will prohibit the selling by the United States consul at Vancouver of cars containing goods from China and Japan. In other words, the Canadian Pacific company will no longer be permitted to receive freight from China and Japan for direct importation into the United States in bond. That trade must be a very considerable portion of their direct trade with the United States. The change which is contemplated is to issue a new regulation which shall be instruction to the customs agents stationed at Vancouver and to the consular agents in British Columbia, forbidding them to accept for sealing and forwarding into the United States any merchandise except that which is the property of the Canadian Pacific or which shall be of United States origin in course of trans-shipment through the Dominion in bond. This, it is understood, will seriously cripple the Canadian Pacific's revenue, and will also seriously damage its commerce. It will effectively stop its acting as common carrier for China and Japan trade direct to the United States and will compel it to cease accepting the consignments of tea from China and silk from China and Japan to the United States ports.

IN ARGADIA.

BY THE "A.M."

"It isn't possible that those Port Lorne people have fallen into such a pleasant place as we have," sighed the twin for the fiftieth time, as we drew in a long breath of St. Mary's salt, life-giving air, and because everybody from the chaplain to the infant echoes the thought at heart a dozen times daily, and because philosophy demands that the existence of this little Eden by the bay shore should be known to other seekers after rest and comfort, we have decided to tell the Cornucopia of its delights.

Like Woolworth's interesting family, we are seven, and as we came on board the New Brunswick, one hot day less week, armed with seven infallible remedies against sickness, we considered our prospects extremely good for a delightful voyage. The quicker we pass over the details of that voyage, the better. It is a subject we avoid in conversation, and we are saving the seven remedies to give as parting presents to our worst enemies, when they too try a life on the ocean wave.

All queer feelings left as we steamed through the Gut into the placid waters of the Annapolis Basin, and saw for the first time the beautiful panorama there unfolded before us.

All too short, then, was the winding approach to Digby, and as we had good by to those of our party who were going to Annapolis, then to Port Lorne, we half regretted that we were not Port Lorne too. Once on the wharf and the new experience began. We were forewarned, and with due humility, we offered our trunks for Her Majesty's inspection, and then walked up the street to see—codfish. Codfish above, codfish below, around, behind and before; codfish covered up and codfish bare; codfish enough to develop in us by its very sight such an unquenchable thirst that we have not yet satisfied it. The well here at our temporary home is exhausted, and Mr. Kinney has great fear that the supply at all the neighboring houses will be, if we prolong our stay.

Digby and its delights were not long for us. Two nuns, and only two in all the province, we had learned by heart, Plympton and Mrs. Frank Kinney; and though our knowledge was of the slightest, thanks to the power of asking questions which in Yankee, and particularly in Yankee school ma'ams, is astonishingly developed, we found ourselves in an unbroken wilderness which we were assured was Plympton station.

Our purpose in stopping here was a mystery to our fellow passengers, and I think we were regarded as a lay branch of the Salvation Army, some of whom were on the train. "Must be a camp meeting up here somewhere," said somebody, and our good conductor asked anxiously how we were to get up to the top of that. That was a conundrum for us too. The only visible means was a rig, and the station agent did not seem to think that we could all be accommodated in that. But though the train was half an hour early, a little eccentricity common to Plympton, it is pretty hard to get ahead of Mr. Kinney, who was on hand in a very few minutes, and took us all in charge. Since that time, not a wave of trouble rolls across our peaceful souls. From that moment we knew that Plympton, not Port Lorne, was the place in all Nova Scotia.

We cannot say that the road from Plympton station to the village is absolutely perfect, but when, from the first hill, the beautiful bay appeared before us, calm as an inland lake and our eyes followed its blue expanse to the soft outlines of the hills that rose from its farther shore, the quiet beauty of the scene caused all minor discomforts to be forgotten.

And now, all ye, who go down to the sea to board, and find stately and scanty tables, who are known as "the boarders," and endured as necessary evils and who must learn to keep in your places, think of our exaltation as the carriage stopped on a breezy height before a cosy white house, affording an air of hospitality in all its surroundings from long piazza and wide-open door to green lawn and shady grove.

And inside—well, we just took possession. The sunny faced little hostess met us at the gate, and gave us welcome, and we had another hearty greeting from the bright-eyed lady whom Mrs. Kinney introduced as her mother; but who, we privately believe is just an older sister, so young is she in face and heart.

It was a real home coming, and the home feeling grew as we went up into the wide, airy rooms prepared for us, and into whose daily appointments it seemed a pity to take such a dusty, way-worn pilgrims as we had become.

How hungry we were for supper, which was ready and waiting, and how nice everything tasted.

Unhappily for our hostess our appetites grew greater every day, but her supplies seem inexhaustible, and she invents new surprises in the culinary line daily.

The days here are not as long as in the States by two or three hours. That is an unfortunate fact for us, since they are so full of good times. If any one wants to know what genuine pleasure is, come down to Plympton and go haying with Mr. Kinney. If any farmer in this region wants efficient help in haying, just take seven boarders along.

Oxen are better steeds than horses, and they are at times more agile; but it requires a liberal education to understand driving them. The twin discovered this to our sorrow, and Plympton post road rarely presents a more animated appearance than it did when a bewildered pair of oxen rushed for a gully, while the air was filled with flying bodies as seven women leaped from the hay cart like sparks from a pin wheel. The haymakers in the fields by the roadside looked on in silence, evidently thinking it a common American way of alighting.

In between a merry-making, came the quiet of Sunday and we all went down to the pretty little

Baptist church in the village. One would hardly expect to find in this little village, a church building so pretty in all its appointments. Low, railed, comfortable pews, free to all, a pretty carpet for the platform, a fine-toned organ, fine stained glass windows, and stained glass windows, all show the refined taste of the people. The church also seems to us a strong proof of energy and enterprise as the house is practically free from debt.

We heard a practical gospel sermon from the pastor, and the intercessionary prayer was strengthened by the information that this is but one of his six preaching places. Surely the ministers here must be hard working men.

A prayer meeting in the evening, supplemented by a praise service around the organ at home, closed the day of rest.

Today Mr. Kinney's ingenuity has been again tested. A magnificent Robinson Crusoe was lost to the world when our host chose a life on land. There is never an emergency to which he is not equal.

This time it was a bathing house on the beach, but a bathing house of such royal type and pattern made of such spicy and wooten boughs and trees that we feel as if we were entering a Naiad's retreat or celebrating the Feast of Tabernacles in booths of Olive branches and pine branches of thick trees.

We have seen the sea serpent, at least most of us have, and the others have lost nothing of our description. We have had the tonic of sea-bathing and sea air, the halm of fir and spruce. We can have quiet inland walks, or we can follow the winding shore. There are secluded little nooks shut in by green leaves, where the silence is broken only by the voice of sparrow, and there are breezy outlooks on the bluff from which we can follow the shining course of the bay as far as the eye can reach; count the sails slowly as they float down toward the sea; listen to the splash of waves on the beach seventy feet below us; or the rush of the wind as it sweeps up the gorge and watch the ever changing hills on the other side of the bay; or the no less enchanting mist that veils them in beauty all its own.

So the days drift by; we are gaining rest and strength in Plympton; we have found the Lotus Land and, for three blissful weeks we take no note of time.

Boiling.

There is no process of cooking which requires so much care and attention as boiling. This is the most extravagant method of cooking any meat if the water in which the meat is cooked, is not utilized as stock. In the necessity of the case no meat can be boiled without losing some of its nourishing qualities and enriching the water in which it is cooked. The French process of braising, by means of which meat is closely covered and slowly boiled in a stock which becomes gradually absorbed by the meat, is the only one by which the meat does not suffer actual loss.

All meat, in boiling, should be merely simmered. There should be a slight ebullition at the edge of the pot, nothing more. This ebullition should be kept up steadily all the time, and the meat should be in the water, and not in the steam, as is the case with the boiling dish or to cook it after it is done. There is difference of opinion as to the best method of cooking salt meats. Some excellent cooks plunge such meats into clear cold water, and bring the water gradually to the boiling point, while others believe they obtain the best effects by cooking them in boiling water. In either case, after the meat begins to boil, it should merely simmer.

There are also two methods of cooking fish. One is to plunge the fish from cold water into boiling salt water, and let it slowly simmer till done. The better method is to put a perfectly fresh fish over the fire in cold water, bring it slowly to the boiling point and let it remain at this point until done.

Most vegetables are better cooked fast excepting potatoes, beans, peas, cauliflower and others which contain starch. Cabbage should be boiled rapidly in plenty of water; and should onions, young beets and turnips. Peas can be cooked thoroughly when tender, in twenty minutes. They should be slowly simmered in as little water as possible. The best way to cook string beans is to merely simmer them for at least two hours when the water they are cooked in should be nearly or entirely absorbed. A little hot cream may now be added, and the beans may be boiled up again.

As a rule most vegetables are over done, but there is something obstinate in the tissues of the bean family, and long cooking is required to make them tender. Lima, or any fresh shelled beans, require an hour to cook tender; but corn, out from the cob is better for only fifteen minutes' cooking, and will be ready for the table if it is steamed on the cob twenty-five minutes. Potatoes are often badly cooked. Half an hour is time for mealy, though some potatoes will cook in less time. All stale vegetables require more cooking than fresh ones.

The Lakeside property in Dartmouth, across Halifax harbor from this city, is about to pass into the hands of a company for the establishment of a college of music. The institution will be affiliated with the Royal College of Music, the London Royal Academy and the Guildhall School. Music pupils will complete with a three years' course in London or at one of the great conservatories. The Catholics of Dartmouth have begun the erection of a $30,000 brick church.

The Sleep or the Just.—For sleepless nights depending on worry, vexation, indigestion, etc., Burdock Blood Bitters is a remarkably efficient cure. "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters for sleepless nights and now sleep well all night. I recommend it to all suffering from imperfect rest."

Geo. H. SHILL, Stony Creek, Ont. 2

T. DeWitt's "Talmage in Ladies' Home Journal": There is not a man or woman in 10,000 who can afford to do without seven or eight hours' sleep. All those stories written about great men and women who sleep only three or four hours a night, make very interesting reading, but I tell you my readers, no man or woman ever yet kept healthy in body and mind for a number of years with less than seven or eight hours' sleep. Awakened next morning they are getting. This lack makes them so nervous and the insane asylums so populous. If you can get to bed early, than rise early.

If you cannot get to bed till late, then rise late. It may be as Christian for one man to rise at 8, as it is for another to get up at 5. I counsel my readers to get up when they are rested. But let the rousing bell be rung at least 30 minutes before your public appearance. Physicians say that a sudden jump out of bed gives irregular motion to the pulse. It takes hours to get over a too sudden rising. Give us time after you call us to roll over, gaze at the world full in the face, and look before we leap.

No Fled from Danger.

Several years ago a Methodist minister was riding through what is known in Northern Maine as "Black's Wood." It was then a stretch of thick woods about ten miles long, through which the stage road ran. The road was a lonely one and had been the scene of many robberies and murders. Presently a man stepped out of the woods and asked for a ride. The kind-hearted minister immediately granted permission, and soon the traveller was seated by his side. As they rode along the good man, always intent on doing some good, whenever the opportunity offered, and being anxious to learn if his companion was a Christian, turned to him and said, solemnly:

"My friend are you prepared to die?"

The man started quickly, and with "Not yet, I guess," put his hand on his revolver pocket, leaped from the carriage and ran for the woods, thinking, no doubt, that he had just escaped with his life.

A Lady from Syracuse writes: For about seven years before taking Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure, I suffered from a complaint very prevalent with our sex. I was unable to walk any distance or stand on my feet for more than a few minutes at a time without feeling exhausted, but now I am thankful to say I can walk two miles without feeling the least inconvenience. For female complaints it has no equal.

IT SAVED HIS LIFE.—GENTLEMAN.—I can recommend Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, for it saved my life when I was about six months old. We have used it in our family when required ever since, and it never fails to cure all summer complaints. I am now 14 years of age.

FRANCIS WALSH, Dalketh, Ont. 2

All the druggists sell that well known preparation T. A. Slocom's Oxygenated Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil, and no preparation for lung troubles, etc., deserves to be better spoken of. Consumptives can now take heart for at the general office in Toronto Canada can be seen the highest testimonials that were ever given a similar medicine.

A DAUGHTER'S INFLUENCE.—I had a very severe attack of bloody diarrhoea and was persuaded by my daughter to try Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, which I did with great success, as less than two bottles cured me. It is worth its weight in gold. Mrs. MARGARET WOOD, Pembroke, Ont. 2

SUDDENLY PROSTRATED.—GENTLEMAN.—I was suddenly prostrated while at work with a severe attack of cholera morbus. We sent at once for a doctor, but he seemed unable to help. An evacuation about every forty minutes was fast wearing me out, when we sent for a bottle of Wild Strawberry, which saved my life.

Mrs. J. N. VAN NATER, Mount Brydges, Ont. 2

FOUR YEARS IN SAWYERVILLE.—"For four years I had pimples and sores breaking out on my hands and face caused by bad blood. Medicine from the doctor was tried without avail, but after using two bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters I am well."

MISS MARIE LEMAY, Sawyerville, Que. 2

MISS HELEN R. SINCLAIR, of Nettie, Man., writes that she has used Burdock Blood Bitters for loss of appetite and headache with the greatest benefit and heartily recommends it. Her experience is shared by thousands. B. B. B. is a specific for headache.

DANIEL KIERSTAD, Canaan Forks, N. B.

Life having become unbearable to him, W. Sullivan, a Boston travelling man stopping at the Ontario Hotel, Rochester, N. Y., could find no relief from a dose of "Cough on a stick" and was found dead in his room. Mr. Sullivan had travelled for Charles Clements, a marble dealer at 79 Mill Street, Boston. He came to the city July 21 and went at once to the hotel where he has since resided. For the past week he had been drinking heavily, but while there was nothing noticeable in his actions, Wednesday night he felt ill, and vomited at once to the effect that he was ill, and did not get up until 5 o'clock, when he was found dead in his room. At about 11 o'clock the chambermaid, unable to get an answer, reported the matter to the office, the proprietor closed the door, and Mr. Sullivan was found lying on the bed, his legs doubled up so that his knees almost touched his chin. His mouth was covered with a greenish foam, and his distorted face indicated that his death had been accompanied by terrible suffering. His body was cold, showing that death had taken place some hours before. On the table was a glass of brandy, and in a chair, a "Cough on a stick" had been found. A search of the room by the effects of the dead man just as he had taken it. On the table was a glass of brandy, and in a chair, a "Cough on a stick" had been found. MISS DENTHORNE'S SURPRISE.

[London Truth.]

The members of the Darkmore
Hunt had a great liking for Squire Denthorne of the Grange, a good-natured, hard natured, hard riding and kindly, if choleric, old gentleman. He was blessed with an only daughter, Mabel, who, accustomed from childhood to do pretty well what she liked, was perhaps, a little wild and self-willed than are most girls of 19. Still, she was sound to the very core; and was a favorite just as much with her own sex as with the men. "Fearless in praising, filtering in blame," she was of a cheerful, generous nature, easily moved to laughter or to tears. And being, in addition to her many accomplishments, an excellent rider and devoted to hunting, what could be expected but that many a good fellow should fall down and worship the fair chateleine of the Grange?
But Miss Denthorne was not so easy to please, and everyone in the neighborhood was finally extremely surprised to learn that she had become engaged, after barely a month's acquaintance, to handsome George Mowbray, a man who had quite unexpectedly come into his uncle's fine place, Stall-bridge Park, close by, and had now for the first time set foot in the county.

And, naturally, surprise might be expressed; for Mowbray—shy, taciturn and reserved—seemed hardly the one to win the fancy of a bright, light-hearted girl. But there the act was, and it had to be accepted.
The squire was well satisfied, and certainly his daughter never for one moment even hinted to him or to anyone that she in the very least regretted the step she had taken.
As for Mowbray, he worshipped the ground Mabel trod on, and a more devoted fiancée no girl could have desired. But he never obtruded himself, and there seemed in him a strength of purpose and a power of reserve that drew Mabel nearer and closer to him. And so much was this the case that she tried to put aside many of her own particular whims and fancies, and to please the man she honored above all others, endeavored to pattern herself on his more staid demeanor.
The strain was, however, too great to be always kept up, and now and then she would break out in her old accustomed manner, and George hardly understanding, would look up in wonder, and then, swiftly un-bending, strive to appreciate the happiness of the jest or the subtlety of the thought, and almost against his own better judgment, would join in the merriment of the moment.

One evening, when sitting in the drawing room, after a hard day with the hounds, the squire all of a sudden brought him of letters that must be written, and strolled away, leaving the engaged couple warming themselves by the blazing fire. The lights had been brought in and the things removed, and Mabel, still in her riding habit, lazily leant back in her lounge chair, in a bewitching attitude of careless ease.
"I suppose," said Mowbray, breaking the charming silence "my manner has brought over my dress clothes and that I must go and get ready for dinner."

"No, George, wait a bit. It's so jolly here and I really can't stir."

"As you like, darling. I don't feel much inclined to move myself."

"I've something to show you," presently said Mabel with some little hesitation.

"Haven't I seen it before?"

"Seen it! No, I am sure you have not. By-the-by, I wonder, George, you never asked me if I had any—However," checking herself in pretty confusion, "I did not mean that."

Mowbray looked at her curiously waiting for an explanation she might desire to give. However, she gave none.

"Well, sweetheart, what have you to show?"

"You'll see to-morrow. I am going to surprise you."

"My chief surprise is," he rejoined,
"that you can see anything to care about in me."

"Now would be the time," she laughed, "to pay you a very pretty compliment, but I shall spare your blushes. Ah!" taking up the Daily Graphic, "here are some move pictures of women riding in cavalier. I wonder how I should look in that costume. I feel inclined to try it."

"Good Heavens! You are not in earnest?"

"Well, lots of ladies ride like that.
Is it not the case that queens and women of the highest rank have done so?"

"That may be. But what has that to do with this matter? I can't understand how it would be possible for a lady of any refinement to adopt such a costume."

"And how do you know [sauceily]
I am not going to adopt it? I am sure it would suit me."

"I know, dear, you are only joking; but I don't like you even to jest on such a subject."

"Just you wait here," said Mabel, rising as she spoke, "and I'll honor you with a private view, all to yourself, of how I look in my new riding dress. It will prepare you for tomorrow, and so saying, before he could remonstrate, she ran out of the room."

Mowbray more than half believed that what his fiancée had said was all just, but there was also an uneasy suspicion in his mind that he might be wrong; and while he was still modily turning the matter over, the door was thrown open, carefully closed and before him stood Miss Denthorne in the garb of the Drakmere Hunt—cap, boots, breeches and all!

"And how do you think I look?" inquired the handsome girl, standing proudly before him, her hand on her hip, with a little mischievous expression in her eyes.

Mowbray started up in dismay.
"I beg—I implore, Mabel that you will at once take those clothes off," he passionately urged.

"Why should I? They fit very well."

"If I have any right to speak
—and surely I have," he hotly said,
"you will at once resume your own dress."

"Are you not rather premature?" she replied, with an angry movement of her head. "I am not aware that I have yet given you authority to dictate to me what I am to wear."

"If your own good sense and ladylike feeling," he coldly made rejoinder,
"do not convince you of the impropriety—"

"Stop, Sir," said the now angry girl, "you go too far. If I am wanting, as you imply, in good sense, ladylike feeling, and the sense of decency, it seems to me that we have both of us of late been standing on false ground."

"I cannot withdraw one word I have said. But, Mabel!" now changing his tone to one of entreaty, "surely you are only doing this to try me.
I implore you to take off this—this costume?"

"Am I to have no voice in this best suits me?" protested Miss Den-thorne.

"Good Heavens! You don't imagine that this—man's dress suits you?"

"Well,"—pretending to glance critically over herself—"I think it suits me very well. And, just to punish you for your rudeness, I shall wear it at the meet to-morrow. Now! what have you to say to that?"

"It seems," her lover coldly made answer, "that two must have been laboring under a mistake. I cannot pretend to the honor of claiming alliance with a lady who can thus unsex herself."

"You are extremely rude," returned Mabel, "and I am sure that I don't want to keep you to your engagement. At any rate, I will not consent to be the butt of your bad temper;" and so saying, she left the room.

Mowbray at once quitted the house, and Mabel, who was a good deal agitated and distressed, said nothing of what had passed to her father, merely remarking, when Mr.
Denthorne commented on George's absence at dinner, that her fiancée had been obliged to return to Stall-bridge Park.

Next day Mowbray, half inclined to stay at home, dreading to see Mabel in the costume to which he so objected, finally determined to attend the meet. Perchance, after all it had been mere fun and bravado on Mabel's part, and perhaps he had been rather hard on her; but then again, had she not as much as told him that she had a surprise in store for him, and had she not when pressed for an explanation actually appeared in the costume he had denounced, which showed she had actually gone so far as to order the detestable garments?

With a very heavy heart, for he was madly in love, he rode toward Stapstone gully, where the meet

Sleeping with Baby.

It is funny to read about, but it is true, that a man named Danthorne was anywhere about. He failed to catch sight of her at all until, the hounds giving cry, the whole field started, when, in an opening of the ranks not 100 yards in front, he recognized the squire, with Mabel beside him on her handsome chestnut—and, alas, she was riding en cavalier.

Angry and annoyed, Mowbray very nearly turned back home, but the sudden fear was borne upon him that the girl, good horsewoman that she was, riding in that strange fashion, was almost certain to come to grief, and, ah! how terrible if she were injured in any way! He accordingly determined to keep her within sight, and this, of course, he easily managed; indeed, at one time the two were close together for a few seconds. He made no attempt however, at reconciliation, and the lady completely ignored his presence. One consoling thought occurred to Mowbray, and it was that by coming late he had been spared all the chaff and badinage which must have been flying about when Miss Denthorne first appeared. Even this was a small mercy, and one to be grateful for.

Again falling back, Mowbray kept his eyes vigilantly on his fiancée, who was now quite alone, and clearing every obstacle that came in her way in capital style. But, ah! what is that? The gallant chestnut in rising at a stiff fence strikes his forelegs on the timber, and in falling his rider is sent spinning to the ground. The horse, unhurt, is soon off on his own account, while Mowbray is promptly by the side of the prostrate figure, lying with face on the ground and the hunting cap clattered over the back of the head.
He was off his horse in a trice, and in an agony of terror knelt upon the ground. Gently lifting the senseless girl, mudstained and disfigured as she was, he rested her head on his shoulder, his eyes, glazed with tears, never wandering from her face, and with unsteady hand he poured a few drops from his flask through the deadly white lips.
Never had he more desperately loved this girl, now that she seemed to have slipped from his grasp forever.

"My God!" he said to himself.
"She might wear a groom's dress if only she would live!"

Presently, to his intense joy, the eyes opened; but, alas! there was no recognition of him in them, and the appalling thought forced itself upon him that her brain must have been affected by the awful shock.

"Mabel!" he implored, "will you not speak to me?"

"Oh don't be a born idiot. Get me some water!"

The face was the face of Mabel, though surely this was not her voice.
But now others arrived, and with them the squire.

"My poor lad!" cried Mr. Den-thorne, "Ab! he's in safe hand with you, George."

"He?" stammered Mowbray, the two now standing aside, with a local medico was doing the needful.

"Yes, I ought to have told you before," he hurriedly exclaimed the squire, "but Mabel wanted to surprise you. The fact is that the boy—the boy is Charley—Ah, thank God! I see he's coming round—"

"Your son, sir?"

"Yes, yes, of course. You see he wanted to enter the army, and failed in the 'prelim.' In a mad freak he enlisted in the 17th Lancers. I was very sore on the point, and we never talked about him. However, I bought him out, and he turned up last night. Mabel and he are twins, and she has been dying to tell you all about him. She insisted on lending him her chestnut to-day, and this is what it has all come to."

In the end no great harm eventuated. Charley was soon able to mount the chestnut, and his father and Mowbray rode home. Arriving at the Grange, Mayel met them at the door, and rushing up to Mowbray, drew her arms around him, and said:
"For dear, I did not for one instant think that you would treat the matter so seriously. In all penitence, I promise never to wear the—clothes again."

He was up to business.

The following story is told of the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh were returning home rather late. When they passed Joe, the well known "tater" man in Pall Mall, they took a fancy to taste his wares, and were accommodated by Joe with red hot baked potatoes from the can, for which they paid a penny each, and proceeded on their way.
Joe had recognized his customers, and on the next day his "tater" can was decorated with a glaring gilt sign showing the three feathers and the legend, "Parvayvor to H. R. H. the Prince of Wales." He stationed his apparatus opposite Marlborough House, to the Prince's mingled amusement and dismay. The Prince sent an enquiry to order him away, but Joe refused to budge, and kept on doing a rushing business. At last the Prince ordered Sir Francis Knolleys to buy him off, and the feathers were removed.

Uncomfortable People.

We all know them; they are in every community, in every church, in many families. They are always uncomfortable themselves, and they inflict discomfort on everybody else.
A really aggressive and well developed specimen will overshadow a locality like a banyan-tree, yielding the whole year through all manner of fruit bitter to the taste, and not to be digested without serious injury. These people supply an ample stock of friction; they bring out the latent possibilities of general unpleasantness in a large or small circle; they sow seeds of discord, and not only in the fallow ground, but by the wayside, and are followed by abundant harvests of the kind that are sown with joy but reaped with tears.

Postmaster Riley said: "I wish I could learn who the little writer is.
It is one of the most touching appeals I have ever seen. Evidently she is an orphan, for she speaks of a Mrs. Clark, and she must be a sufferer, for she speaks of her mother hunting her so. The little thing has been pining for her mother and perhaps some one has told her to write or maybe it has been an inspiration of her own; quietly it would seem that there ought to be some reply to that. It certainly is very touching."
